The Day of Reckoning Draws Nearer for Quebec

By WILLIAM JOHNSON
Special to the Times
(An Analysis)

QUEBEC — The internal crisis in the Quebec government has been postponed, not resolved.

The long knives are for the time sheathed.

Social Affairs Minister Claude Castonguay, after leaking on Wednesday his irreversible decision to resign that very night, called a press conference late Thursday to announce that his conscience did not allow him to quit in the midst of the labor turmoil in the province.

Communications Minister Jean-Paul L'Allier, who also had made known his firm decision to resign, rushed off his statement of reconsideration at 3 a.m. Friday. He could not call a press conference then as almost all the parliamentary correspondents had gone to bed, so Mr. L'Allier confided his scruples to a wire service.

★ ★ ★

"It is essential that all who are conscious of the public interest and who wish to work to maintain the social equilibrium realize today the gravity of the stakes and shoulder their responsibilities," he said.

He is staying on, at least for the present.

In the National Assembly Friday all seemed back to normal as Mr. L'Allier repeated his statement of fidelity to duty.

Mr. Castonguay was back at his seat that had been empty the day before. Premier Robert Bourassa occasionally smiled and waved at a colleague, the members rose on the usual points of privilege, sent the usual barbs against the opposition and thumped their desks over witty repartee.

But beneath the bland surface the fissures run deep. There is a reckoning ahead and a settling of scores that will affect the course of the party, the province and the country.

There is no return after the steps taken by Mr. Castonguay and Mr. L'Allier. Two of the most prestigious ministers in the government, they stuck with their resignations on Wednesday, the day the labor protest movement was swirling with premonitions of insurrection.

That day in Sept-Iles, an isolated town of 18,000 on the North Shore of the St. Lawrence River, workers protesting the jailing Tuesday of the province's three labor chieftains in effect occupied the town, cutting off road and rail communications, taking over the radio station and closing down just about all economic activity.

A man died and a dozen people were injured after a car charged the demonstrators. In the state of confused communications no one knew how serious was the challenge to the government or what proportions it would assume in cities, town and work sites throughout the province.

It was then that the two dissident ministers decided that the federal budget, brought down Monday night, contained the last ignominy and the final evidence that nothing was to be gained by negotiating with the federal government.

By raising unilaterally old-age pensions, Ottawa flouted Quebec's long-standing claims that social security is primarily a provincial field of jurisdiction and that the provinces must be allowed to elaborate a coherent social policy with social priorities determined by the provincial government.

By coincidence or calculation, the two men decided to act just when the Quebec government was most vulnerable. Their resignations, coming amid a crisis of civil disobedience and defiance of the government by the labor movement, stabbed the premier of Quebec, not Prime Minister Trudeau, in the back.

Their resignations, carried out, would have fanned the challenge to authority and conceivably led to the resignation of Mr. Bourassa. Who could have replaced him in the midst of a double crisis is not clear.

★ ★ ★

The bargaining power of the dissident ministers is at its peak this week when the government must at any cost remain united.

It seems clear that Mr. Bourassa got the two men to reconsider leaving the cabinet only after making commitments that he would take a firmer line with Ottawa.

Mobile Gunman Scores

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI) — Separate shooting incidents in Belfast late Friday and today killed one man and wounded six others.

None involved British troops.

The army at first said it was responsible for gunfire that killed a Roman Catholic vigilante and wounded four others in the Andersonstown area just before midnight but then said the shots came from a passing car.

A gunman in a passing car was also blamed by the army for the later wounding of an 18-year-old youth in the left arm as he left a taxi in Andersonstown. In North Belfast, a man was shot in the right ankle following a clash between rival crowds of Roman Catholics and Protestants, an army spokesman said.

In Londonderry, the Rosemount joint police-army post on the fringe of the Roman Catholic Creggan Estate was the target for two intensive attacks by snipers overnight. Troops said they believed they hit three gunmen.

The first battle lasted 40 minutes and an estimated 300 shots were exchanged with up to eight gunmen, the army said. The second came several hours later, lasted 75 minutes, and involved about 250 shots. Both attacks came from neighboring schools.

End Strikes, CLC Appeals To Quebecers

Times News Services

The executive of the nation-wide Canadian Labor Congress today appealed to striking Quebec workers to return to their jobs and restore calm to the troubled province.

The country's labor leaders also asked the Quebec government to do its share in releasing imprisoned union men and granting an amnesty to all those who have taken part in almost five days of walkouts following the jailing of the province's three top labor leaders.

In Montreal today, garbage is starting to pile up on city streets and litter accumulate in parks with the strike of 8,000 civic outside workers.

Police in Canada's largest city are harried with demonstrations, firebombings and the threat of bombings.

TROUBLE EASES

A school was firebombed Friday evening and threats of similar action made in other areas.

Since it is the weekend, there has been little trouble at industrial locations at such places as St. Jerome, St. Therese and Sept-Iles today. Friday, however, all industry and essential services in those communities were at a standstill.

Quebec premier Robert Bourassa Friday night stuffed his cabinet, putting Labor Minister Jean Cournoyer in the flashpoint civil service portfolio — taking it from Jean-Paul L'Allier who quit his cabinet earlier this week and then returned.

L'Allier was little respected by unionists who considered him a hard-liner — they feel

Bus-Truck Collision Kills 14

BEAN STATION, Tenn. (UPI) — A double-deck Greyhound bus, behind schedule and barreling along an East Tennessee mountain highway in the gloom of a wet dawn, slammed into a tractor trailer today, killing 14 persons and reducing the two vehicles to wads of twisted junk.

"It was a nightmare," said one of the 15 survivors of the accident, which happened at 5:45 a.m. about 40 miles northeast of Knoxville on twisting, two-lane U.S. 11W.

The bus was split in two by the impact and the tractor-trailer, loaded with tar paper and paint, exploded in an inferno that melted much of the vehicle.

Community Planning Lack 'Snow Job'—Campbell

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

POWELL RIVER — Municipal and regional politicians were told here Friday night that they are handing the public "a snow job" by failing to develop proper community plans for their areas.

They were also warned that if they fail to take the initiative in this respect, provincial legislation may be introduced compelling them to prepare such plans.

The statements came from Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell when he addressed 75 delegates attending the 23rd annual conference of the Association of Vancouver Island Municipalities.

Campbell said only three out of more than 150 municipalities and five out of 28 regional districts in B.C. have so far adopted community plans, but every community in the province should have one.

"That is the real device that protects peoples' property because everyone knows what the objectives are in terms of density and so on.

"If municipalities have not looked at this in the next year, I would have to say in the legislature that community plans for municipalities will have to become somewhat more compulsory than they are now."

The minister's comments were in response to a question from Oak Bay Mayor Frances Elford, who asked his reaction to a resolution which the municipality had placed on the order paper for today's session of the conference.

The resolution urges Campbell to change recent amendments to the Municipal Act requiring only a simple majority for passage of zoning bylaws, instead of the former requirement of a two-thirds majority.

Campbell told Mrs. Elford that if a community plan existed no reasonable council should require a four-out-of-five vote to determine "the mechanics" because the mechanics were not as important as the plan itself.

But Saanich Mayor Hugh Curtis protested that the minister was using his community plan argument as a "distraction." No municipality had ever asked for the two-thirds majority to be changed, he said, and this action amounted to ratepayers' safeguards being eroded.

Similar comments came from other delegates.

Campbell retorted: "The community that has not got a community plan is giving the public a snow job, because spot zoning and the question of protection of property by zoning or subdivision regulations is as wishy-washy as any council wishes it to be."

He complained that municipal leaders were inconsistent by seeking a two-thirds majority in this instance yet demanding a straight majority in other voting issues, for instance with regard to referendums.

But Mrs. Elford remained unconvinced. She rebuked the minister for "comparing apples and oranges" because he likened voting on land use with voting on whether municipal dollars should be spent for a certain purpose.

NEWS BRIEFS

Fire Kills 18

TOKYO (UPI) — Fire raged through several floors of a seven-storey building housing a department store and a cabaret in Osaka today. Police said at least 18 persons were killed and nearly 50 others injured, some of them when they leaped from the building.

Claim Rejected

JERUSALEM (Reuter) — Foreign Minister Abba Eban of Israel rejected International Red Cross claims that Israel abused the confidence and emblem of the Red Cross in using troops to rescue passengers and crew of a hijacked airliner held by Arab commandos.

Memorial Service

KELLOGG, Idaho (AP) — Church leaders of all denominations have organized a mass memorial service for the 91 men who died in the Sunshine silver mine disaster. The service will be conducted sometime next week in Kellogg's high school auditorium.

Flood Danger

OTTAWA — A "very serious" flood threat exists in the Fraser and Thompson river valleys the Commons was told Friday. Len Marchand (Liberal—Kamloops-Cariboo) said snowpack run-offs indicated these areas might face potentially worse floods than had occurred at any time since records had been kept.

Soviet Ships Keep Going

Times News Services

Eight Soviet merchant ships are steaming toward the North Vietnamese port of Haiphong, mined last week by U.S. planes, Moscow radio reported today in a broadcast monitored in Britain.

The heavy tonnage vessels are loaded with fertilizer, agricultural machinery, food and clothing, according to the radio report. It did not say when they are due to arrive off North Vietnam.

Two Soviet warships are also moving toward the North Vietnamese coast, according to the Japanese defence agency.

TOWNS RECAPTURED

In Vietnam, South Vietnamese marines opened a counter-offensive in Quang Tri province today and recaptured three towns in their first major counter-attack against the North Vietnamese offensive.

Helicopters put a force of abut 1,700 government trooops on the northern side of the My Chanh River, and in the first hours of fighting the forces seized the towns of Hai Lang, Thon Hoi Yen and Thon Van Tri about five miles north of the river and six miles south of the provincial captial of Quang Tri.

In the southern region, heavy fighting raged for the third straight day at An Loc, the long-besieged provincial capital 60 miles north of Saigon. North Vietnamese troops made repeated bloody attacks on the city, which President Nguyen Van Thieu has ordered held at all costs.

In another development, military sources said today a U.S. warplane used a single electronically guided bomb Friday to knock out the Paul Doumer Bridge over the Red Biver in downtown Hanoi. The bridge was the only rail link between the North Vietnamese capital northeast and northwest to the Chinese border and to the port of Haiphong.

RALLIES SLATED

Meanwhile, in the United States, protesters against the mining of North Vietnamese harbors planned a fifth day of demonstrations, with rallies scheduled in 20 cities.

Scattered displays of popular support for President Nixon's new war policy also appeared.

TISDALLE OUT, ISHERWOOD IN

Veteran Social Credit MLA John Tisdalle, who has held Saanich and the Islands through six consecutive elections in 19 years, was rejected by his own party riding association Friday night, losing his bid for the provincial nomination to city lawyer Foster Isherwood.

Tisdalle, 53, was first elected to the legislature in the Bennett sweep of 1953. He said he had lost the nomination Friday by just one ballot.

Tisdalle said he has no immediate plans but he ruled out the possibility of seeking nomination in another riding.

STARTED AS GRIT

"We still don't know what's going to happen," he said. "We may not have an election for another year."

Isherwood, 49, and a political campaigner since 1951, has been an unsuccessful federal election candidate for both the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberals, was twice elected an alderman in Saanich and was defeated in a bid for the Victoria mayoralty in 1971.

He began as a Liberal, switching to the Progressive Conservative party in 1964 because of what he called the "shameful mishandling" of the flag issue by the Liberals.

Tisdalle today repeated he has no immediate plans but said "I'm open for options. I'm always open for options. I just hope we (the Socreds) don't lose the riding, that's all."

He also pointed out again that "if the premier goes for another year, then our nomination will have to be reaffirmed."

Isherwood won the nomination on the second ballot. A third candidate, Carl Bitterman, was eliminated in the first vote.

Tisdalle, addressing the 98 voting Socreds and 50 visitors before the voting began, said "Social Credit is not on trial here. Neither is the member . . ."

"Nothing breeds success like success," Tisdalle said, citing the record of the party and of himself in the past 19 years. He referred to a suggestion made more than once during the meeting that it was time for a change.

UNFAITHFUL

"If you're of that opinion," Tisdalle warned, "you're no longer faithful to your government.

"You don't throw away a tried recipe for one that has not been tried," he said.

Isherwood in his pre-nomination speech told the meeting he was seeking the nomination "because I feel there is a job of work to be done for Saanich and the Islands. It's time for a new look . . ."

Isherwood told the meeting he had been a Social Crediter for four years and pledged to stand behind the party.

Isherwood, of 3615 Cadboro Bay Road, first ran for political office in the general election of 1951, as a Liberal. He lost to former Tory external affairs minister Howard Green in Vancouver Quadra.

He was defeated again in 1958 in Fraser Valley by the Tories.

In 1962 he ran, still as a Liberal, in Victoria, losing to the Conservatives.

In 1963 he sought the Liberal nomination again, losing to present Victoria Member of Parliament David Groos.

He ran as an independent Liberal in that year, losing the election to Groos.

In 1964 he announced his switch to the Tory ranks, ran as a Progressive Conservative in 1965, losing to the Liberals once more.

His second party change, to the Socreds, came in about 1968.

Murder Trial Witnesses Tell of Chaotic Scene

The chaotic scene at the parking lot of a Victoria beer parlor early Feb. 24, was described in B.C. Supreme Court Friday during a murder trial arising from stabbing incident there.

Ronald Flewin, 21, is charged with the non-capital murder of Russell Street, 20, of 520 Ridley in Colwood in a case before Mr. Justice J. G. Ruttan and a jury of six men and six women.

Streeter was taken from the parking lot of the Colony Motor Inn, 2852 Douglas, in an ambulance summoned by police. Court was told earlier he had three stab wounds in his mid-section and chest and was pronounced dead at Queen Victoria Hospital at 2:07 a.m. the same morning.

Crown witness Richard Lacey, 23, who had been drinking in the beer parlor with Streeter and Peggy Tychkowsky, said there was "a lot of confusion" on the parking lot near the 1:30 a.m. closing time.

It included a small sports car "zig-zagging around the parking lot" at up to 30 miles an hour and trying to run people down and subsequently a fight involving the car's occupants.

Lacey said while this was going on he saw the accused yelling at Streeter near an entrance to the beer parlor.

Flewin "was screaming at Streeter, 'I want to see my kid.' "

(Earlier in the trial court was told Miss Tychkowsky had lived with Flewin and had a child by him but they had broken up about two years ago.)

"Streeter didn't say too much and I didn't hear too much," said Lacey. "The sports car was still around and there was a lot of confusion."

Lacey said he saw Flewin move in on Streeter with both hands moving towards the deceased's chest.

"I don't know what he did — whether he pushed him or not."

Streeter then fell back a few feet, with "just a stunned look on his face," Lacey testified.

He said Flewin then started talking to Streeter again.

"I looked down and saw blood right in front of me. I asked 'who's bleeding?'. Nobody replied, Lacey said.

Then he asked Streeter if he was all right but the victim didn't answer.

Miss Tychkowsky testified she had seen Flewin shove Streeter and afterwards "put something behind his back."

She added that she didn't see anything in Flewin's hands.

Also Friday, witness Charles Laderout, a friend of Streeter's, described a heated argument involving himself, the accused and Streeter about two weeks before the fatality.

Miss Tychkowsky was the subject of the argument and Flewin was warning Streeter to leave her alone. It took place in the same beer parlor about Feb. 12. Laderout said Flewin threatened to shoot Streeter if he didn't "hit the road" and shortly after delivering the threat, "gave a gesture and flashed open his coat and I saw a revolver in his waistband."

Under cross-examination, he said he was not sure of the words used but it was "a good threat."

Victoria police Const. Frederick Mills told the court there were about 35 or 40 youths "milling about" when he arrived at the parking lot about 1:38 a.m.

While he was questioning the occupants of a small sports car he saw two men approaching his cruiser.

One, later identified to him as Streeter, "was slumped over, grasping the vicinity of his abdomen." The other man was assisting him.

Before they reached the police car, Streeter collapsed. Mills said he radioed for an ambulance as soon as he pulled up Streeter's shirt and found a small cut in his abdomen.

The trial, which opened Thursday, continues Monday when Crown counsel Kenneth Murphy is expected to conclude his case. Defence counsel is Robert Price.

Environment Courses Requested for UVic

A move is being made to establish a program of environmental studies at the University of Victoria.

Three professors — Marcus Bell and Robert G. Reid of the biology department and W. R. D. Sewell of the economics and geography department — have submitted a proposal to the UVic senate seeking such a program, to be run as an experiment for four years, starting in 1973.

The matter will be considered at the senate's meeting Thursday night.

Bell, Reid and Sewell propose that the senate set up a committee — which would include representatives of their group, senate and the academic planning committee — to organize the program into administration and course offerings no later than February, 1973.

The effect of the proposal would be to have a separate department set up for the exclusive study of the environment. Like the English department or philosophy department, environmental studies would operate on its own, with its own professors, its own department head and administrative staff.

A somewhat similar program was set up earlier this year by the senate to concentrate on Pacific studies — discussions of the Pacific Rim countries in their relationship with Canada and world trade and politics.

STUDENT DEMAND

In their proposal, the three professors point out the growth in public awareness of the environment, and the demand by students for courses on the environment and its management.

Interst has been mounting in the press, in provincial and federal parliaments and in the formation of environmental quality interest groups, they said.

The professors said much use has been made of the facilities of Environment 100 and that students have registered their interest in the environment through their Alma Mater Society and through the academic planning committee.

The professors favor Victoria as a location for a program because the community has shown it is interested in the environment and is the location of provincial government offices and several major federal government offices.

The proposal calls for the program to include courses on the environment which are being offered, but as parts of other degree programs.

Such courses are included in the departments of geography, biology, political science and economics.

Seminars integrating topics from several different disciplines would be included in the program, which the student would credit towards his graduation.

SPRING CLEANING WEEK PROCLAIMED

Next week is "Paint-up, Clean-up and Fix-up Week" in Victoria, according to a city hall proclamation.

The proclamation is signed by Acting Mayor Clyde Savage, and one of its flowery phrases describing Victoria provides an ironic contrast with comments made by Savage himself last month.

This type of special effort, the proclamation says, could produce "a sense of pride that will be a personal morale booster as well as enable the city of Victoria to retain its world-wide reputation as a beautiful city of flowers and gardens . . ."

But Savage himself had harsher things to say about the city in an interview last month. He described Victoria as a "grubby, lifeless, uninteresting city" with litter problems, devoid of architectural beauty and no pride of ownership."

Friday, Savage said he still basically regards Victoria as "beautiful," but added: "Let's not be smug about it. Let's get out and improve it."

Generosity Greets Hawaiian Singers

A touring high school choral group from Hawaii "will never forget" their visit to Victoria.

That was the comment of director Lois Liske when the Hana School Chorus from the island of Maui was presented $260 after staging a concert at Central junior high school Friday. Miss Liske, a native of Kelowna, said the sum raised by collection "was quite unexpected." She added that the proceeds from the concert will be most welcome in helping defray tour expenses The Hawaiian students, ranging from 16 to 19 years of age, come from a village of about 750. They spent almost two years raising $7,000 needed to take them on their first visit to North America.

Miss Liske said the Central junior high students council was to share in Friday's proceeds, taken on a collection basis. The Victoria students, however, voted to turn over the entire proceeds to the visitors.

"I'm very proud of my students," said principal Bill Garner. "But I must also say we were delighted to have the Hana Chorus visit us. I've seen professional performances in Hawaii that weren't as good as the one we saw tonight."

The 20-member Hana chorus left Victoria this morning for a five-day visit to Kelowna.

wielding clubs and charging on horseback Friday dispersed 5,000 rock-throwing antiwar demonstrators outside a San Francisco hotel where California Gov. Ronald Reagan and New York Mayor Nelson Rockefeller were appearing.

A band of construction-workers in hardhats waded into a rally of about 400 war protesters at Dag Hammarskjold Plaza near the United Nations. New York police forced the two groups apart.

Some 400 chanting demonstrators — most of them youths — carried their protests to Capital Hill in Washington. One group made a foray on a congressmen's office.

At Fort Walton Beach, Fla., near Eglin Air Force Base residents demonstrated to show their approval of Nixon's stepped-up air and naval moves against North Vietnam.

Nixon supporters marched through the city and sent a delegation of seven residents to Washinton with a petition bearing 15,000 signatures supporting the president's war policy.

The premier said yesterday that the population of the province is "massively" behind his government.

He blamed many of the walkouts on "goon squads" which he said were intimidating other workers.

Meanwhile a warning has been sounded by Charles Neapole, president of the Canadian and Montreal stock exchanges which is strangley reminiscent of the crisis in October 1970, following the kidnapping of British diplomat James Cross and the kidnap-murder of then-labor minister Pierre Laporte.

ANARCHY

The present situation, Neapole says, constitutes a state or "incipient anarchy."

He warns that the illegal strikes and forced closure of businesses will further weaken Quebec's already shaky image in the eyes of potential investors and hinder needed growth in the province.

The entire situation is "utterly deplorable," he says.

Montreal's two English-language daily newspapers published on schedule today as did the city's four French dailies. All six were closed down by walkouts yesterday.

Both English papers, however, printed front-page statements saying the decision not to publish Friday came as a result of pressure from outside sources.

. . . RECKONING

In fact on Thursday, while the two ministers were away meditating and the whole legislature and press gallery hung on their decision, tough statements against Ottawa were made with conspicuous ardor by Mr. Bourassa, Jean Cournoyer and Normand Toupin.

Mr. Cournoyer, who said he was choosing his words carefully, told a parliamentary committee that "after discussing it with the private members the government will probably have to modify its overall strategy."

He confessed that the "soft approach" hitherto taken toward Ottawa had served the province badly.

The hard words toward Ottawa were no doubt conciliatory signals for the benefit of the two brooding ministers and a sign that Mr. Bourassa's policy in federal-provincial negotiations would in future be different.

He got his two ministers back and the government has survived its internal crisis.

The two men, it is true, both returned to the fold after public expressions of extreme reluctance. Mr. Castonguay stressed that it was his conscience that made him stay on during the present crisis, but he warned that he would be watching the future actions of his own government.

Though he did not elaborate, he will presumably resign if he detects signs of back-sliding.

Mr. L'Allier's statement also gave few signs that his reunion with the cabinet was permanent.

The two men were already considered rather as outsiders by the private members and the rank and file. Mr. Castonguay is a former technocrat and a friend of Claude Morin, the nationalist former deputy minister of inter-governmental affairs credited with elaborating the Quebec-centred policies of the past four provincial governments.

Mr. Morin in speeches, articles and a book has been castigating the present provincial and federal governments for reducing Quebec, as he claims, to the level of a municipal administration under the control of Ottawa. Mr. Castonguay took up many of Mr. Morin's themes in his statement Thursday night.

Mr. L'Allier is regarded with suspicion for having once taken out a Parti Quebecois membership card before he ran for the Liberals in 1970.

The two, and Mr. Cournoyer, a former Union Nationale minister who is also very nationalistic in his views, are considered as not really Liberals but political birds of passage who might someday find a roost in the Parti Quebecois.

The events of this week will have profoundly deepened the distrust between the nationalist and the pro-Trudeau wings of the provincial Liberals.

They are now committed, it seems clear, to a course that will either bring the provincial government into conflict with the present federal government or will result, sooner or later, in a split within the provincial Liberal party.

In either case the unity realized yesterday with Mr. L'Allier's return is unstable. A purge some time in the future seems inevitable and the stakes will be the policy of the government on the Canadian constitution and Quebec's place within Canada.

It was a very mild night over B.C. At 3 a.m. the temperature was 60 at both Quesnel and Prince George, several degrees higher than the all time high minimum record for the month of May. A Pacific cold front which crossed the northern B.C. coast overnight will move into the interior and down the south coast today accompanied by periods of rain, however amounts will be light. A following ridge of high pressure promises a sunny day for Sunday although early morning cloudiness is likely in many areas.

The Strike That Started With Lunch-Break

By NORMAN HARTLEY
(Special to the Times)

ST. JEROME, Que. — Protest strikes which brought more than 7,000 workers out in two days in St. Jerome spread Friday to the big General Motors of Canada Ltd. plant at nearby Ste. Therese and it all began with a lunch break.

At lunch time yesterday, about 100 strikers from St. Jerome, 45 miles northwest of Montreal, drove unobtrusively down the Laurentian Autoroute to St. Therese and put up small picket lines at the entrances to the GM facory.

Inside, there were no signs of life, just a giant car park full of GM products belonging to the workers and the anonymous high-walled buildings and smoking chimneys. It did not look as though the St. Jerome group would have much effect where they were, several hundred yards from their colleagues inside.

Then, suddenly, an hour later about 50 cars started heading out of the factory and the St. Jerome pickets cheered. Their strategy was going to work.

"The GM people don't usually go out to lunch," a St. Jerome union official explained. "They eat in the cafeteria, but their leaders hadn't wanted to organize a strike officially. So they told us to put up some picket lines outside so they couldn't cross them. They're coming out for lunch — and they won't go back."

At the gates, three members of the tiny St. Therese West police force stood by. A GM junior executive arrived and was stopped.

"No one goes in. There's no work today," he was told.

"By what authority?" he asked through the car window.

"By the authority of the workers of Quebec," he was told.

"Move on."

Another car drove up and a minor argument started.

One of the strikers turned and shouted to the picket leader with a grin: "It's all right. He doesn't speak French but he's learning."

But although the pickets were successful in blocking the entrances they were visibly relieved when the first GM workers started streaming out, even though they represented a small proportion of the 2,000 unionized men inside.

"I don't know how long they'll stay out," St. Jerome union official Yvon Leclerc said.

"We are not fooling ourselves. We don't think there's going to be a long illegal general strike, but it's symbolic. It's the first time it's happened this way in Quebec.

"Someone in every family in the region is being affected."

By mid-afternoon yesterday, the St. Jerome pickets were no longer needed.

Still not many GM workers were on strike, but they had gathered in their own union hall in Ste. Therese to talk over the strategy for bringing out their fellow workers.

The snowball was still rolling.

The snowball strategy had been planned earlier yesterdy in the Hotel Lapointe in St. Jerome, the town's unofficial social centre and also now its unofficial union headquarters.

The three main union bodies, the Confederation of National Trade Unions, the Quebec Federation of Labor and the Quebec Teachers Corp., all meet there to plan their efforts within the region autonomy they have been given.

"There's not exactly an official line of action, but everyone has been asked to organize whatever protest they can as best they can," CNTU local president Pierre Mercil said.

So far the teachers have been the least divided. In two days, 1,300 of their member have struck, closing all the primary schools and most of the secondary schools around St. Jerome. More than 2,000 public servants have also struck, their numbers mounting with the same snowball effect as was used in Ste. Therese.

One group comes out. They go and encourage the next. There has been no need for coercion, but everyone feels isolated, and it helps to know that other groups are coming out, too.

The "free radio stations," in union hands across the province, now also help a lot, making the strikers in St. Jerome feel less cut off.

In St. Jerome, the strike has become very effective.

Two hospitals have been hit, though essential services are being maintained, and the staffs of an old people's home and several Quebec Government offices are also on strike.

Union leaders say that 2,500 of the 3,000 construction workers in the district have walked off the job, halting every major road and building project around St. Jerome.

In the factories, things went more slowly at first, but by midday Friday 1,200 workers were out, closing most of the main industries in St. Jerome, including ITT Canada Ltd., where the only potentially dangerous clash with police occurred.

On Thursday afternoon, ITT had not struck and workers from other plants that were out — like Regent Knitting, Kerilon and Boise Cascade — went down to persuade them.

ITT union officials invited them in but riot squads from the provincial police and the St. Jerome police moved in and broke up the protest.

There were a few scuffles but no serious violence and 25 people were arrested, bringing the total for the day to 41 in similar incidents.

They were all released within an hour, after having their names taken and being searched.

Shortly afterwards, the ITT workers walked out and another symbolic victory had been won.

Yesterday afternoon, police used nightsticks to form a barrier to block about 200 demonstrators who tried to enter the Rolland Paper Co. plant in St. Jerome. The demonstrators dispersed without incident.

One of the earliest important symbols had been the incidents at the local radio station, CKJL, "900, the Voice of the Laurentians."

The seven unionized workers there closed the station, were ejected by the police, then re-entered with the help of 60 other striking workers.

Now, the station is off the air and closed until further notice, according to Christian Peters, an announced and union official.

"It's the symbols that are really important," Mercil said.

"About half the work force in the Lurentian area is not unionized and we don't really expect them to come out. They have so little protection, but they are watching all these incidents and the effects are going deep."

Mercil said Friday the target was to bring out all of the estimated 25,000 unionized workers in the Laurentian area end. He thought they were about one-third of the way there.

"We started with St. Jerome and we were very successful. Now we are going to try to spread to the outlying areas.

"But it's not just the numbers. You have to rememner this is a political strike and most of the people walking out have never taken part in a political strike before.

"The strike may not last all that long, but I think the real effects will start within six months.

"After all this, the Liberals to present the same face as government will never be able the workers again."

Drug Study Shows Mescaline Suspect

By TOM HUTH
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Show me a man who says he's selling mescaline, and I'll show you a liar.

That's the message from the head of Maryland's new anonymous drug analysis centre. The centre has tested 223 drug samples turned in by apprehensive users since last fall, and found that 57 per cent of them were not what the purchasers thought they were.

Among the most misrepresented drugs, Dr. David A. Blake said this week was mescaline, an organic hallucinogenic substance. A report on Blake's centre said that 26 samples of supposed mescaline were submitted, and only once contained any of that substance. Most were stronger hallucinogens such as LSD or PCP and four samples contained no drug at all, the report said.

Blake said simply, "Nobody's got mescaline." He suspects that other drugs are being sold as mescaline because of a desire among young people for natural rather than synthetic drugs, paralleling the movement to natural foods.

Mescaline, taken from small cactus plants, has long been used in religious ceremonies by Indians of Mexico and the American southwest.

English novelist Aldous Huxley used it and extolled its mind-opening virtues.

The drug analysis centre tests any drug mailed to its Baltimore offices or sent in by drug treatment centres. About a third of the drugs come from the Washington area, Blake said, and most come from users who have had unexpected or bad experiences with drugs in question.

The Washington regional laboratory of the U.S. Bureau of Narcotics and dangerous drugs analyses substances seized by policemen, and has had the same experience concerning mescaline.

Jack Rosenstein, the bureau's chief chemist, said that in its 3½-year experience, the laboratory had never found any mescaline. Nor, he said, had it ever found any THC, the active ingredient in marijuana that supposedly is sold in pills and other forms.

Blake agreed: "Nobody's got THC."

The report by his centre showed that 15 samples of purported THC were turned in, and none contained the real thing. Fourteen of the 15 contained PCP, regarded as a dangerous animal tranquilizer, and two contained an addictive opiate called Dilaudid.

The tests also showed that most samples of LSD contained impurities and that amphetamines, barbiturates and tranquilizers often were misrepresented.

To have a drug tested, a person is asked to send it in a plastic bag along with the serial number of a dollar bill. Four days later, the person can call and, after identifying the drug by giving the serial number, is told what the substance is.

Blake, chairman of the pharmacology and toxicology department at the University of Maryland, believes that his laboratory's service helps to prevent drug abuse by exposing the deceit involved in drug trafficking.

Like the old travelling medicine men, Blake said, drug dealers are able to sell their untested wares under any name they choose, and like manufacturers of legal drugs, he said, underground dealers who are stuck with an unpopular substance can change the name to make it more appealing.

FACE BREAK-UP, ANGLICANS TOLD

MONTREAL (CP) — Bishop R. Kenneth Maguire, Anglican Bishop of Montreal, said Friday that local Anglicans must face the possibility Quebec may become a separate state and act accordingly.

Definite action by the diocese would make little progress without removing a kind of psychological block "which deters many Anglicans from discussing openly the important issues facing modern Quebec," he said.

The diocese must learn how to face the "various options which are being offered as the key to Quebec's future."

These options run all the way "from the present status quo to that of becoming a separate state," he told the closing session of the annual synod of the Anglican diocese of Montreal.

No matter "how threatening some of the changes in Quebec may seem to this or that English-speaking person, all of us in the diocese will benefit by open discussion among ourselves, and by open dialogue with French-speaking acquaintances.

"Let us remind ourselves that in principle the challenge to Christians in Quebec is the same as it is to Christians all around the world."

He said the challenge to all churches was to support the "development of people towards greater community, freedom and justice."

This was particularly difficult now for the Anglican Church in Quebec, Bishop Maguire said.

Martin Facing Massive Suit

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actor Dean Martin has been hit with a $6 million damage suit charging that he refused to continue working on the film Showdown.

The suit filed Thursday by Universal Studios seeks to recover the costs of production which was halted May 8 when Martin left the filming location in Chama, N.M., the studio said.

Friend of Slain Pair Seeks Pistol Permit

VANCOUVER (CP) — Margaret Lucas, whose husband said six shots were fired at him through his apartment door, picketed the public safety building Friday demanding a permit for a gun.

Mrs. Lucas joined a civic workers picket line with a sign saying: "A second-class Canadian mother wants the right to protect her children and home."

Thursday, she left her two children, aged four and 11, in the court clerk's office, and they now are in the care of the Children's Aid Society. She said she needs a gun to protect them.

John Lucas told police Wednesday that shots were fired through the door of their apartment when he answered a knock during the night. Six holes were found in the door.

Mrs. Lucas said she was issued a permit to carry a gun by RCMP May 8 but it was revoked soon after by city police and the gun was seized.

The couple were friends of Charles Shepherd and Betty Stein, found murdered in a city home Good Friday.

HIGHEST SUMMIT TALKS DISARM IRA GUNMEN

LONDONDERRY (Reuter) — "If an IRA man comes to confession, it's usually a sign that he's thinking of giving up the gun."

Rev. Denis Bradley, 26, was talking about his parishioners in Londonderry's rebel Bogside area, where power is held by the Irish Republican Army, and where police and British soldiers rarely tread.

Father Bradley does not support the killing, maiming and sabotage which has been carried out by the IRA in the name of a united Ireland since the often-violent strife between Protestants and Roman Catholics began in Ulster in 1969. But he sayd he understands the motives.

"I would like to see a truce and so would 90 per cent of ordinary Catholics in the Bogside," Father Bradley said. "But Catholics have little reason to trust the British army and the British administration."

One helpful possibility he envisages is a new law-enforcement body drawn mainly from the Catholic population. The Catholic minority in Northern Ireland have always considered the police a tool of the Protestant majority.

APPLIES PRESSURE

"Wherever I can, I put pressure on the IRA to accept a truce," Father Bradley said. "But the power of the gun is a terrible thing."

The priest said he has no sympathy at all for the Official wing of the IRA, which works for an all-Ireland socialist republic on Cuban lines.

For the more militant Provisional wing, which has little political ideology, Father Bradley has slightly more understanding.

"These men justify their actions by falling back on the church doctrine that killing is permissible in a just war. But what we need is to reduce the myth of glory by the gun that runs through Irish history."

"The greatest blow that could be dealt to the IRA would be the ending of internment without trial in Northern Ireland," Father Bradley said. "If that happened, the support of ordinary people for the IRA would fall right away."

Father Bradley said he has not noticed any diminution of religious faith in adults.

"When people realize they may be shot any day they begin to think more about religion."

SHIFT CHOICE ALLOWED

OTTAWA (CP) — For the first time in the public service, about 50 employees of a federal department will be given a choice of which 7½ hours they wish to work in a day.

The consumer and corporate affairs department will allow the group to start work at any time between 7:30 a.m. and 9 a.m. during the summer months.

All must work until 3:30 p.m. at least. There is 30 minutes for lunch.

Guy Roussel, the department's chief of staff relations, said if the experiement works, it probably will be extended to the other 2,000 members of the department next summer.

A New Immigration Act

Current concern over Canada's immigration laws and procedures bears little relationship to conventional criticisms aired when high unemployment creates hostility to the influx of alien labor. The issue raised at present is based less on quantity than on quality. Too many criminal and other undesirable elements are moving too easily into the country, we are told by police and other authorities.

This is only one part of the problem besetting the department, but a vital one. If, as is alleged, the country is becoming a haven for foreign criminals who, once deported, have little difficulty in returning to Canada, then the loopholes through which they slip must be plugged.

No doubt, in the replacement, or amendment, of the Immigration Act scheduled next fall this point will be kept clearly in mind. Mr. Bryce Mackasey, the minister involved, has confessed that he is "bothered" by the improper treatment of existing rules, or their inadequacy, and is planning corrective legislation.

One of the difficulties involved in change has been defined by an unidentified senior official in the department — the political implications attached to laws and procedures which permit foreigners to come into the country. Pressure by ethnic groups is obviously not overlooked by elected representatives who decline to expose themselves to charges of racism.

The fact stands, however, that a more efficient arrangement has to be made. This would be the case if only to clear up the mountainous backlog of appeals launched by aliens in Canada as visitors and applying for status as landed immigrants.

The suggestion has been advanced that the number could be reduced by extending greater authority to localized immigration officers specializing in "personalized assessment." This seems to mean that a department official, chosen for his particular abilities and given special training, would be in a position to make decisions on the acceptability or non-acceptability of applicants, thus reducing the cumbersome process of referral to the immigration appeal board. The proposal promises despatch, but contains obvious weaknesses. "Personal assessment" would scarcely be based on an officers' predilection toward applicants with blue eyes, fair hair and light skin, but the subjective attitudes of individual officials could vary.

Certainly Canadians do not want the criminals of other lands coming into this country to commit crimes here. But while those who draft prospective legislation are engaged on their task, they must keep before them the Canadian attitude toward the person in another land who seeks legitimate asylum here from persecution in his own country, or who, seeking wider opportunities, brings with him integrity and the skills, culture and capabilities which will enrich the Canadian mosaic.

In a world of over-crowded countries it is unrealistic to assume that Canada, the largest country in the western hemisphere, with 3,851,809 square miles of land and fresh water, can fence out other peoples to preserve the land for a population now running to only 21.6 millions. It is not unrealistic to defend the country against the inroads of elements which would destroy the character of Canada or make in it cosy nests for those who prey on society.

A Chance to Clear the Air

Early consideration of school building referendums which may be submitted to the public for projects in 1973 presents an ideal opportunity for the school board to clear the air on various matters which have troubled the tax-paying public. In recent years the voters have given generous response to proven needs for more accommodation — an attitude in sharp contrast to that on operating expenses.

Several basic issues deserve a thorough airing in the construction field. This year, the public has been informed, elementary class enrolment has dropped substantially from the total of the preceding school year. As they contemplate seeking public support for new schools, the trustees have the chance to inform the public of probable trends in school population. They may also find it desirable to explain in greater detail the siting of schools in prospect and explain some of the difficulties indicated last September when boundaries were changed, not necessarily on the logical basis of existing pupil population in various localities, but, by report, to readjust student bodies to overcome miscalculations in schools that had been built.

It might also be profitable to remove public doubts on certain features included in new buildings — the unwanted open teaching area at Victoria West comes to mind.

In the light of discussions during recent months, the proposal to spend a third of a million on updating and improving the school board's central office requires a forthright explanation. Lacking one, the public might reasonably ask if this implies further proliferation of the administration.

A general inclination, by no means restricted to this community, prevails at present for voters to take a hard look at the way their educational dollar is spent. At the same time Greater Victoria has, in recent years, established a reasonably sound reputation for providing the accommodation required for adequate schooling of its young. To preserve that attitude and to remove doubts, the board has every reason to present the referendum picture in the frankest possible terms.

BRUCE HUTCHISON

Rule by Men, Not Law

Professor Ted Mann, of York University, has a terrifying sense of humor. He recently told some Toronto students that they were destined to live in a chaotic age and "the only way around this dilemma is to enjoy it." The trouble with this advice is that only a few men as humorous as the professor will take it.

Mankind in general is comical enough these days to make the gods laugh, and in Olympus they must be dying of laughter. But humans are made of weaker stuff. As a species they have not matured sufficiently to relish their own misery. The godlike enjoyment of chaos is beyond their reach. Professor Mann laughs alone in his echoing ivory tower.

Outside, in the brawling society of North America, we see exactly the opposite process at work. There men are not enjoying, but desperately trying to end, the age of chaos, without visible success. This is the meaning, so far as politics have meaning, of the election campaigns now under way in Canada and the United States. Apart from a rebellious minority which rejects all discipline as unnatural and immoral, both nations are tired of chaos. They yearn for some man who can give life an orderly pattern even while it changes, as it must.

Impossible Responsibility

For the time being two men have this impossible responsibility. To be sure, Prime Minister Trudeau and President Nixon are very different types of men but their task is basically the same. So, in both countries, is the hope of the people — the pathetic hope that some man will arise to save them when, in fact, they are not yet ready to be saved, by self-discipline, from their own folly.

The United States was founded as a nation governed by laws, not men, but that ironclad constitutional guarantee has melted into government by men, not laws. Who is deciding the nation's next course in Vietnam? Who is negotiating with Russia and China? Who is fixing, or attempting to fix, the wage-price rules of the American economy? Only the president, who deals with half a dozen men, or less, in Moscow and Peking.

While the Congress grumbles, now and then, against this concentration of presidential power, none of the men who hope to replace Mr. Nixon are promising to reverse it. On the contrary, the McGoverns, Humphreys and Wallaces promise to use the presidency for larger and stronger purposes and Mr. Muskie failed because he seemed to have no purpose, only tears.

The decisive issue of the election, overshadowing all others, is the character, not the policy of the next president, the single human being, not the political apparatus surrounding him, the trustworthiness of a person, not the theory of the constitution. If the people felt confident that they could fully trust Mr. Nixon, or some alternative, they would take a chance on his future policies which neither they, nor he, can possibly foresee anyhow in the age of chaos.

Similarly, the decisive issue in the next Canadian election is Mr. Trudeau, himself, not his policies, aspirations and white papers. Argument rages around this policy or that but most Canadians will vote simply to confirm Mr. Trudeau in office because they like him, or to dismiss his government because they don't.

PIERRE TRUDEAU
. . . the decisive issue

If all this seems a queer parody on the democratic process it represents a sound public instinct, much older than democracy and much more reliable than party platforms.

In the age of chaos the average voter cannot hope to understand the complexities of modern government and even a skilled expositor like Mr. Trudeau cannot explain them, in merely national politics. As for the higher politics of the world, the hot-line messages between Washington, Moscow and Peking are too secret for explanation and will not be revealed in history books until long after their contents have lost all practical meaning. Nevertheless, the people's instinct and visceral hunch remain sound.

They may not know, in detail, what their governments are doing. They cannot grasp, and lack sufficient information to decide, many great issues of policy. Yet the people have a godlike, almost infallible, judgment of men. They are sometimes deceived by a man when he first appears on the scene, but let him remain in power for a few days and all his virtues and defects will be written on the public mind with pitiless clarity, as those of Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Nixon are written already in a flaming alphabet legible to everyone.

Thus amid the semantic chaos of American politics, the jargon of Populism, the Centre, the Right, the Left and other labels, there is no chaos in the public mind about what it wants above all else. It wants an end of chaos in society. So does the public mind of Canada which, unlike the private mind of the laughing Professor Mann, cannot enjoy the grand joke of anarchy.

That is why an idealist like Mr. McGovern achieves a sudden popularity when he promises to put society on a new road but a steady course. That, too, is why a reactionary demagogue like Mr. Wallace becomes a credible candidate overnight when he promises, against all the facts and the law of social gravity itself, to reverse history and revive an America long dead.

A Sad Smile

Alas, neither man, nor any alternative, can redeem those opposite promises when society must go through an inescapable spasm of uncertainty, trial and error, before it settles down again, if that is possible. In the meantime we can perhaps afford a sad smile for the men of the so-called Right who expect a return to the good old days if they can only elect a sensible government like themselves, and a grim giggle for the men of the Left who imagine that, if elected, they could resurrect the lost Age of Reason.

Yes, some funny things are happening on the way to the millennium, but only a professor in the laughable labyrinth of Toronto is likely to enjoy their sublime humor. For lesser men it is enough to make the best of things in an ever-changing society and to enjoy the even better things still freely available outside it in a world still lovely, if we have the eyes to see its wonders.

ART STOTT

Floating a Works Project

The old pensioner who sits on a log on our beach when the sun shines and philosophizes on the state of the nation, was discussing concerns of the day this week. He keeps abreast of the news and places the foibles of men in high places within the framework of judgment based on years of living. His assessment of the budget reflected a shrewd self-interest, but wasn't unkindly.

"Mr. Turner has recognized us," he told me. "We're going to get a little more money and the increase is tied to the rising cost of living. That means if we haven't been getting enough, we'll be getting more to maintain our not-quite-enough status. Not many of us will be splurging on champagne, and, at our age, beer can lie a little heavily on the stomach. But we can still manage a glass of hot water with a spot of lemon juice in it each morning. We're probably healthier that way.

"Still I don't think you should underrate that young fellow Turner's idea of fostering employment by making special concessions to productive industry. If the government concedes enough to ensure a profit, it seems to me the money-makers will have no difficulty in thinking out schemes to give jobs to people who can then increase the money-makers' profits. I have a project of my own, based firmly on under-exploited raw material and requiring a minimum of expensive training to provide jobs.

Raw Material

"Take this log we're sitting on. All it's doing now is providing a seat for loafers like you and me— and not a very comfortable one at that. Look along the beach. There are hundreds of logs. Then think of all the dozens of other beaches with hundreds of logs on them.

"There's your raw material practically going to waste. Now if you devise a conversion scheme, particularly if it permits recycling, you provide a product without losing your resource."

The old pensioner fell silent, gazing out over the Strait, where a couple of navy vessels were apparently doing their incomprehensible thing.

"Keep those ships in mind," he resumed. "They touch peripherally on my project. You and I, as civilians, don't know what they're doing — except keeping a fair number of men off the unemployment rolls, which coincides, in a way, with that young fellow Turner's concept of what has to be done.

"Alright, now back to the logs. We recruit a work force — all the employable unemployed — and set them to yarding the logs out into the water. Then, when they've been boomed, the logs I mean, we assemble the booms into one great floating platform; make it several tiers deep, if necessary. Then we tow it out there, well away from shore, houses,

Unexploited Resource

hills and obstructions and establish a buoyant airstrip. Planes using it would be far enough away to reduce the noise nuisance. It would be under air space sufficient to let aircraft manoeuvre coming in and going out. And it wouldn't usurp ground that could be used for other productive purposes.

"Don't shake your head," he said to me. "Floating airstrips have been considered before. And don't think you can raise any argument about prohibitive expense. We'd tie the project to the defence department. In that area, expense loses all relevancy. You think not? Well, young man, you probably have forgotten about the Bonaventure. And obviously you haven't noticed the small item the other day about the hydrofoil, the Bras d'Or. It's classified as a hulk now, after a few millions of Canadian taxpayers' dollars plunged through its hold into the deep, deep sea.

"Don't worry about the money. Work on that Golden Arm provided employment. That's what my floating airfield would do.

"You think a log-built floating airstrip would be impractical? What's it matter? Call it a defence project and you're home free.

Perpetual Employment

"You're wondering about the recycling bit? Haw! You've been living around here for years. You ought to know that when the sou-westers scream in during winter, my log creation is going to break up. The logs will float back onto the beach. Then we can start all over. Perpetual employment, see?

"The ramifications are endless. Think of the groups of experts we'd send all over the world to study floating installations. And we'd fix it so the experts would all be local pensioners — balancing off the idea of the benefits of travel and opportunities for youth, at public expense. We'd need special studies on tides, on the power of moving water, on what to do when the fog rolled in, how to look after the incidental pollution. We'd even have a task force, with computers, to determine the best ways of convincing the national government that our project was far and beyond other plans to channel defence spending into valuable employment schemes — meaning the floating airstrip."

The old pensioner fell silent again, a sly grin on his face. I left him, thinking that age takes its inevitable toll, but asking only that he leave at least one log on the beach so we could sit on it and talk when the sun shines.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

FREEMAN KING

For those who like to walk the forest trails and drive the back roads the season presents many changes in the world of plants.

The arbutus is showing blooms in many places, the yellow-white blossoms clear against the dark green leaves. The garry oaks show a reddish tinge in their leaves and will soon break out their feathery catkins. This tree is one of the last to come into leaf.

The maples have now changed, and their leaves have that little parasol look which hides the already formed seeds that, as a rule, are in pairs.

The dogwood, our provincial floral emblem, is now at its best. Stop and look at the blossoms. You will find that some have up to six of the white sepals. The true flower is the little yellow centre. Look closely and you will see how each little "dot" is a bloom.

Have you looked at the Douglas fir and seen the little brownish husks now breaking away as the new twig is appearing?

Stop by a cottonwood and smell that delightful perfume of the Balm of Gilead. Perhaps you can find its relation, the poplar, with sharp-pointed leaves on a slender flatish stalk trembling in the slightest breeze.

On the ground the Easter lilies have finished their blooming and the little seed pods are now standing erect, so different from their appearance when the plant was in full flower.

The trilliums are now noticeable only as three spreading leaves on a spindly stem.

For some blossoms you must look close to the ground. There you will find the tiny cross-like flowers of the bedstraws. These plants are one of the "hitch-hiker" plants and have tiny hooks on the stems and leaves.

The buttercups abound. See how each little blossom looks as if it had been varnished. Perhaps you will find the rather inconspicuous member of this family, the Bongardie buttercup, with the very small flower which, in many cases, has three petals only.

Look for the dainty, whitish flowers of the fringe cup with its finely cut five petals that at first glance seem to be separate.

Stop at some of the rock outcrops and see how the lichens and mosses are now becoming brown and drab. Mingled with them will be the stonecrop, or sedum, that is putting forth its golden, star-shaped flowers.

The insect pattern, too, is changing. Now we find several kinds of bees, and some of the queen wasps are commencing to build the start of a new colony.

China Avoids 'Tall Grass'

By DENNIS BLOODWORTH
The London Observer

The harsh days of denial during the Cultural Revolution, when a heroine of the long march and wife of a Chinese Marshal could be pilloried as a "bourgeois reactionary" by the Red Guards for keeping chrysanthemums in two ornamental pots, are part of the long past in Peking today. China is loosening up, liberalising itself from prim, proletarian monotony.

Revolution is no longer interpreted as a popular urge to "eat dishes with the same flavor, wear clothes with the same style, dress the hair in the same manner." There should be a greater variety of things to eat, rules the official press "simple and elegant" new-style clothes, "good-looking" hair styles. Buttoned-up Mao jackets may be the rage in New York, but Chinese officials going abroad are beginning to take to city suits.

Like an old lag narrowing his eyes in the sharp sunlight as the gates close on his last prison sentence, the wary Chinese finds himself once more facing the temptations of limited freedom that could trap him into earning his next.

●

The peril is particularly acute for the intellectual. He is no longer safely confined to memorizing the Thoughts of Mao. If he takes a calculated risk he can read classics like the hilarious and irreverent Chinese pilgrim's progress that Arthur Walley translated for the west as Monkey, or Dream of the Red Chamber, the great 18th-century sociological novel whose controversial Marxist interpretation provoked a major purge in 1955, or the first new Chinese translation for nearly 80 years of Thomas Huxley's Evolution and Ethics.

The establishment itself is calling not only for readable works that will popularize history and science, but for popular editions of the Communist operas so ferociously edited by the implacable Madame Mao in the sixties.

The arts are still weapons of Communist propaganda "culture" as conceived by Mao, who believes in using "the pen in attack, the gun for defence." The stage must still reflect the Party platform and Madame Mao's "model plays" must still be taken as shining examples by all. Nevertheless, new false horizons beckon.

On the eve of the 30th anniversary of the Chairman's historic pronouncements in Yenan on revolutionary art and literature, theatrical companies have been encouraged not only to adapt these model operas to the local popular art form, but to be "daring" enough to produce new plays, drawing if necessary on ancient Chinese and even foreign literature. It is officially reported that they staged "a total of 100 experimental works of creative art" during the Hupeh Arts Festival in March alone.

But how far can they go? The official press and radio has at the same time bitterly attacked those "class enemies" in the provinces who have sabotaged and "maliciously distorted" Madame Mao's approved operas by slipping in feudal heroes disguised as modern revolutionaries and by introducing bourgeois twists to the plot, sentimental love scenes, dubious ditties and other odious counter-revolutionary gimmicks with the misguided aim of making the show entertaining.

"He whom the snake has once bitten avoids the tall grass," the Chinese say, and there was something almost sinister to mistrustful minds about the stress laid last month in provincial China on the need to let "a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend" as they had at the Hupeh festival.

Mao first used this old Chinese saying in May 1956, when he introduced a new policy of intellectual freedom in China in order, as he said disarmingly, to enable "all people in the academic world to exert their strength to the full, manifest their creative and positive role, to pool their thoughts and learn from each other through the media of free discussion . . . in order to accelerate the building of socialism."

Mao warned that all polemics must be contained within the philosophical framework of Marxism, but added that if other ideas crept into the debate "we are of the opinion that this is of no consequence." He was confident that Communist logic must prevail.

He was not ready, therefore, for the accelerating avalanche of angry dissent that roared down upon the Chinese Communist Party from those who had taken him at his word and started to say and write what they thought. His reaction was not long delayed. Within 14 months China had been put through a "rectification campaign" and an "anti-rightist struggle," the State legislation relating to "Labor Custody" and the indiscreet among the intelligentsia of China found themselves fulfilling a variety of unaccustomed tasks from washing out university lavatories in Peking to hauling timber in remote reform camps in the provinces.

Once bitten, the canny Chinese tried to avoid the tall grass, but he was moving through rough political terrain. In the early sixties the labor camps claimed many more candidates for ideological reconditioning, and the Cultural Revolution saw millions publicly humiliated, thrown out of their jobs, and "sent down to the country" to expiate their "bourgeois" or "revisionist" sins.

●

Teachers hounded from their classrooms during the Cultural Revolution but urgently needed today again to educate the young, and civil servants tossed out of their offices but urgently needed today again to administer the provinces, have in many cases shied away from returning to posts that have proved politically dangerous and made them vulnerable to vicious attacks.

And now writers and artists who saw almost everything that had been set in print before 1936 reviled, condemned and reduced to ashes are also saying, according to Honan Radio, that "cultural activity is dangerous, difficult and may lead to misfortune."

This cautious attitude is described as "poisonous" and a "deliberate trick of the bourgeois class." Proletarian intellectuals "must never stand still just for fear of making mistakes." But Chinese who are exhorted to write popular scientific works remember what happened in the sixties to those who hinted that technology might be as important as the Thought of Mao. They see themselves accused in their turn one day of "taking a slavish attitude towards the foreign philosophies" of a mechanized West, and in some cases they have stopped reading technical works altogether, just to be on the safe side with the Maoists.

The irony of it all is that the new power-holders under their effective and pragmatic leader, Premier Chou En-lai, are almost certainly quite straight-forward in their desire to liberalize the arts as well as the clothes, hair-styles and the national menu of China within the limits that Socialism permits.

But they are the heirs of a Maoist policy which has left millions frightened of nothing so much as the freedom to err again. In consequence a frustrated leadership in Peking is not straining to move an angry god, but a reluctant dragon.

The bonds have been loosened, but . . .

Rural-Urban Division Foils School Trustees

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

The recently-concluded convention of the B.C. School Trustees Association in Vancouver managed to demonstrate one thing through its three days of deliberations; it is too varied and cumbersome a body to do the school boards of the province much real good.

The problem is that the large and the small school districts in the province do not have enough in common to be able to judge each other's peculiar problems adequately, or with enough patience.

The trustees from the Cariboo, for example, are not overly anxious to support the setting-up of special classes for gifted children, but the trustees from Vancouver care a lot about it because they have the numbers of exceptional children who could make good use of such classes.

A resolution at the convention calling for these classes was defeated.

Similarly, a resolution calling for a more flexible policy for the age a child can enter school did not get the support of the convention.

Not much opposition to it was voiced on the convention floor, yet it was defeated. And trustees from such districts as Victoria and North Vancouver will have to go back to their areas to face a considerable number of parents this September who argue that their little Johnny is indeed ready to enter school and why do you bureaucrats always get in the way of progress?

Split Into Two

The point of the exercise is that there should be two separate bodies to allow the trustees of the province to get together to talk about and hammer out possible solutions to their common problems.

One body should be for the small school districts, say those with budgets of under $4 million per year. The other would be for the larger districts like Victoria, Vancouver, North and West Vancouver, Coquitlam and others with budgets over $4 million.

This way each group of trustees would be able to discuss intelligently the effects of government legislation or population trends on their respective districts, the large with the large, the small with the small.

No longer would there be the somewhat obvious boredom which has pervaded the proceedings of recent conventions, boredom which usually leads to less than enthusiastic support for what may have been a good educational policy.

This same framework could be fitted into the way the trustees do their business now, which is all together in the same room. The trustees from the large districts could get together for part of the convention, and the small district trustees the same, and the two groups could meet later in the convention to discuss matters which may be common to them all.

But the present system, which usually sees only those resolutions passed which offer something to every group of trustees, is not good enough and leads to frustration on the part of trustees from school districts of all sizes.

The fact that an overwhelming majority of trustees at the annual convention come from relatively-small school districts tends to make the gatherings particularly frustrating to the larger districts.

Burnaby school district pulled out of the BCSTA last year, followed by Surrey school district. Greater Victoria is seriously considering pulling out itself, after experiencing considerable difficulty in getting its resolutions past the BCSTA executive for consideration by the convention and then approved on the convention floor.

One of these resolutions proposed that the BCSTA adopt as policy that education should be financed from general revenues of the province, rather than by the present system of property taxes.

The resolution was defeated, but that is nothing new. It marks the fifth time since 1966 that the same motion, in different variations, has been defeated by the trustees.

And part of the reason has to be that the system as it exists now hurts the small school districts less than it hurts the large districts. So the small districts vote to keep it and the large ones vote against it.

The reason the smaller districts don't mind education financed by property taxes is that assessment levels tend to be lower in the rural areas than they are in the big cities. As a result, the mill rate, which is fairly even across the province, costs the rural taxpayer less than it does the urban taxpayer.

And the urban taxpayer screams — then goes out and marks a large black "NO" on the next referendum ballot he encounters.

And that cramps the style of the trustees who would like to use a little tax money to advance their school district.

Always Beaten

So the trustees bring the proposal back to the convention the next year, and the next, and the next. And it is defeated each time.

The property tax is the most visible and least-hidden of all the taxes. Sales tax is added onto the purchase price, income tax is usually deducted from the source of income, but property tax has to be paid in one lump, each and every year.

Despite the fact that the home-owner grant is designed to offset the effects of the property tax, it is never really appreciated. That is because the taxpayer never actually "sees" the money. The amount is merely taken off what he has to pay in tax and he is not able to hold the dollars in his hand and say, "This is my home-owner grant."

So the property tax absorbs all the criticism the poor little taxpayer can muster against the system. If anyone ever tries to make his property tax any higher, he screams and votes no.

Perhaps separate meetings of trustees from different-sized school districts would be able to iron out some of these problems. Perhaps not.

But at least all the trustees would be in a position where they are adequately acquainted with the problems they are talking about. And, because all that went on would involve them, they would be interested.

Less Than Half a Loaf

By ARNOLD TOYNBEE
The London Observer

The wisdom of accepting half a loaf is proverbial in a situation in which "no bread" is the only alternative. Human beings normally settle for half, but what is my decision to be if I am offered less than even half of the full loaf that I believe to be my due?

The situation arises only if I am the weaker party to the encounter. If I am negotiating from equality or from superior strength, I am likely to be offered a whole loaf. If I am actually offered less than half I cannot reject the meagre scrap without exposing myself to the certainty of suffering.

Yet the penalty for accepting less than half a loaf is also serious. Practically, I shall be renouncing all future possibilities of a fairer deal in exchange for a derisory "mess of pottage," and psychologically I shall be so humiliated that my spirit may be permanently broken.

★ ★ ★

In the present-day world there are, to this world's shame, some unfortunate communities and classes so weak and so callously disregarded by more powerful fellow human beings that they must dumbly accept whatever is meted out to them. The Australian natives, the "Indians" in the United States, and the poorest of the poor in all countries are in this tragic position.

Since the Second World War the problem presented by the offer of less than half a loaf has arisen for seven communities which, like the Australian natives and the American "Indians," have been victimized by "settlers," but which have not been so weak that they have been bound to accept the settlers' dictates.

The communities that have had to face the grim choice between accepting and rejecting less than half a loaf have been the Palestinians, the Algerians, the Black Africans in Kenya, Rhodesia and South Africa, the Black ex-African citizens of the United States, and the white Roman Catholics in Northern Ireland.

In Algeria and Kenya the victimized populations rejected less than half a loaf, and this decision has been justified by the eventual results, though the price paid by the former victims for their eventual victory has been high.

The Palestinians have made the Algerians' choice, and are paying for this, without yet being able to see victory on their horizon.

In the other four cases, the issue is still in the balance. It is still uncertain what the victimized party's choice is going to be, and if the answer is a rejection, it is uncertain how the struggle will end.

The Algerians' victory has been remarkable; for although they were, like the South African blacks, in a strong numerical majority, they had a million European settlers to contend with. The French settlers in Algeria were about as numerous as the Protestant British settlers in Northern Ireland, and they were equally fanatical. Moreover, they were backed by the French professional army, which did not shrink from resorting to methods of barbarism.

Fortunately for the Algerians, French professional officers' barbarism revolted the French conscripts, and the conscripts' revolt was backed by President de Gaulle. De Gaulle's disposal of the professional army and of the settlers was a most amazing, and most laudable, achievement. Today, Algeria is free, and both the French Army and most of the French settlers have gone.

In Kenya, the struggle has had a happier ending. Here the settlers were a numerically insignificant minority, and when they recognized that they must capitulate, some of them left, like the French settlers in Algeria. But those who have chosen to stay have been given tolerable conditions by Mr. Kenyatta, who has seen that their continuing presence is a valuable economic asset for his country.

★ ★ ★

In the United States, the black community is split. Some of its members consider that they have been given a fair enough half-loaf to ensure that they will succeed in winning the whole loaf eventually. Others have come to the bleak conclusion that nothing but a resort to violence, in the face of fearful odds, offers any prospect of winning for them what they consider to be their full rights.

The Palestinians' prospects are likewise bleak, but at least they have behind them the support of the rest of the Arab world, to balance world Zionism's support for Israel.

In Southern Africa, the pot is simmering. It looks as if the Africans will decide to reject the offer of what is clearly far less than half a loaf. They can hardly be unaware of the suffering to which they are exposing themselves if they decide to do battle; but they have one asset in common with the victorious Algerians and this is their overwhelming superiority in numbers. Their numbers give them confidence, no doubt — expecially in Rhodesia, where there is a white minority of about 250,000 among five million blacks.

★ ★ ★

The Roman Catholics in Northern Ireland are in a minority, but the Protestant settlers are only about twice as numerous and there is one point in which the situation in Northern Ireland is unique. Here white settlers are victimizing people of their own race, and they have been doing this for more than three centuries.

The attitude of the Protestant settlers in Ulster towards the Catholics is like the Spartans' attitude towards the helots. Like the Spartans, the Ulster Protestants have not been content simply to oppress their local fellow Europeans; they have rubbed the salt of humiliation into the wounds inflicted by injustice.

We know what eventually happened in Sparta's miniature empire. The fate of Ulster lies today on the knees of the gods. We cannot yet foresee the Ulster Catholics' final answer to the question raised for them by Britain's suspension of the Stormont government.

They may or may not see in this half a loaf which it would be wise for them to accept.

The weak are disregarded

YATES STREET HILLSIDE

MPs Hustle On Pensions

OTTAWA (CP) — Legislation to raise old age pensions was hustled off to committee by the Commons Friday, increasing prospects of 1.8 million Canadians getting bigger government cheques as early as next month.

"Political banditry," charged Conservative House Leader Gerald Baldwin (Peace River). "Exploiting the plight" of old people, said his counterpart for the New Democrats, Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre). Too little for too few, complained Rene Matte (SC—Champlain).

But all parties agreed to send the bill to the Commons welfare committee for detailed study, paving the way for enactment possibly by next week.

Debate immediately turned to a complementary bill to increase pensions for disabled veterans and their dependents, enthusiastically applauded by Mr. Knowles. That bill will return for discussion next Tuesday following additional budget debate Monday.

INCREASES YEARLY

The old age pension bill would allow pensions to rise each year by the same percentage as the rise in living costs the preceding year.

Currently, all persons over 65 get $80 a month. Needy pensioners get a supplement, an additional $55 for single persons, $95 for couples, which rises two per cent each year to make up for rising costs.

Under the bill, all pensions this year would rise 3.6 per cent —the amount of inflation last year. Pensioners with supplements would get $150 a month instead of $135 if they are single; $285 instead of $255 if married.

First cheques, which will go out as soon as the bill passes — possibly by June—will be bigger than normal to make up for increases for the first part of this year.

Mr. Knowles, Ran Harding (NDP—Kootenay West) and Lorne Nystrom (NDP—Yorkton-Melville) said the pension should be based on $150 a month rather than the current $80. Pensions should be linked to the growth in a country's living standard, not just the cost of living.

Proposed increases would just allow pensioners to maintain the same standard of living they had when they retire, Mr. Knowles said.

It was inhuman and uncivilized to tell old people they would not share in improved living standards along with the rest of the country.

FAVOR LOWER AGE

Mr. Harding and Mr. Nystrom said the pensionable age should be lowered to 60 from 65, permitting earlier retirement and more jobs for younger workers.

Mr. Mate and Henri Latulippe (SC—Compton) reiterated party philosophy that a guaranteed income for all should replace current social security programs.

New Home For Cancer Station

The free cancer dressing station operated by the Order of the Eastern Star is moving to a new location, spokesman Mrs. W. W. Bell said Friday.

The station, which provides dressings for anyone who needs them, has been operating out of the Legion building on Courtney each Thursday from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Effective May 25 the station will be located at the glad tidings Tabernacle, 842 North Park, with the same hours.

Anyone needing dressings because they mossed the move can reach Mrs. Bell at 477-3897.

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

★ ★ ★

A FISCHER VARIATION

Bobby Fischer leans mostly to 1. P-K4 when he has the White pieces, and as Black he chooses the Sicilian Defence (1. P-K4, P-QB4) and after 1. P-Q4, N-KB3; 2. P-QB4, P-KN3; 3. N-QB3, P-Q4 (the Grunfeld Defence) is his favorite.

He is able to play any line of attack or defence. No one knows the opening better than Fischer, but the above are certainly his most often used lines of play. Twice against Boris Spassky, he has played the Grunfeld Defence — and lost both games.

For this reason, it is interesting to see the following game as White introduces a new thought to White's play against the Fischer line. This against an opponent who was not prepared for it! Fischer surely has seen this game by now and must have something against it.

Played in the Athens, Greece, tournament, 1971.

WHITE: Ivan Waganjan, U.S.S.R.
BLACK: Kenneth Rogard, U.S.A.

(a) So far the games played by Spassky-Fischer in Santa Monica, 1966, and Siegen, 1970.

(b) A new move, which was first suggested by Ertim Geller. Spassky played in Santa Monica 12. Q-K1, Fischer played 12 . . . P-K3. With 12 . . . Q-R4; 13. R-Q1, PxP; 14. PxP, QxQ; leads to an easy draw. In Siegen, Spassky played 12. P-KR3, P-N3; 13. P-B4, P-K3; 14. Q-K1, N-R4; 15. B-Q3, P-B4; 16. P-N4, BPxKP; 17. BxKP, B-N2 with a good game. In a game Scheidel - Adorjan, Hungary, 1971, there followed 16 . . . B-N2; 17. KPxP, KPxP; 18. NPxP, R-K1; with advantage to Black. Spassky played 17. N-N3 against Stein's 16 . . . B-N2 in the Alekhine Memorial, Moscow, 1972.

(c) Leonard Barden suggests here 12 . . . P-K3; 13. P-B4, P-B4.

(d) Was it better to take back with the pawn?

(e) Also 17. N-N3 is playable. If then 17 . . . N-B5; 18. B-N1. All because of his 12th move!

(f) Much better is 18 . . . NxB; 19. QxN, R-Q3.

(g) If now 19 . . . NxB; then 20. Q-K6 ch, etc.

(h) Exchange of Queens costs a pawn.

(i) Bringing the Rooks together is more to the point here. Thus 29 . . . R2-Q2 is needed.

(j) If 37 . . . N-Q8; 38. Q-Q7 ch, etc.

Nitrogen, Paper Solution to Car Pollution?

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Researchers say that "paper" cars powered by liquid nitrogen some day may whisper down the streets, helping eliminate pollution and reducing highway deaths.

"It would sort of take care of a lot of problems," says Prof. Lindley Manning, a machine design specialist at the University of Nevada-Reno.

He predicted that within 20 years nitrogen-powered vehicles could be mass-produced at prices competitive with today's gasoline-powered automobiles.

Manning said that with some 15 students and a fellow professor, Richard Schneider, he has been hammering out a prototype of the nitrogen-powered car, being built for about $1,000.

It is designed to travel about 60 miles an hour.

Schneider conceived the nitrogen engine concept about two years ago and now has several patents pending, Manning said.

The body is composed of honeycombed weave of paper and glass fibre and is similar to the material used in the Apollo moon-lander.

Manning said the body material is energy absorbing and would save lives during collisions. The material is rust resistant "and would float—if that's any advantage," he added.

Exhaust emissions would consist entirely of nitrogen.

"Since the atmosphere is composed of 80 per cent nitrogen, anyway, all we're doing is borrowing the gas for a while," Manning said.

Liquid nitrogen turns to gas at temperatures about 320 degrees below zero and ordinary atmospheric temperature would be sufficient to expand the gas to run the engine, he added.

But Manning noted one hitch: Nitrogen is manufactured by burning fossil fuel.

"But it could also be made by burning garbage," he said.

"And our rough calculations show that there is sufficient garbage in this country to supply enough fuel for the nation's cars for many years to come."

Industrialist-inventor William Lear called the nitrogen car "kind of an academic solution" to the pollution problem.

However, Lear noted that "it would take a billion-dollar investment just to convert over the service stations" just to dispense nitrogen.

Manning agreed, but said that dwindling supplies of fossil fuels might justify the investment.

Mackenzie Flood Water Recedes

FORT SIMPSON, N.W.T. (CP) — Flood waters subsided today and the flood threat appeared to be over at this community of 750 population 600 miles north of Edmonton. Ice jams blocking the Mackenzie river went out Friday.

The airstrip at this community on an island at the junction of the Liard and Mackenzie Rivers had been under four feet of water early Friday. Hangars and offices were flooded after the river spilled over its banks on the low-lying part of the island.

Four families, made up of 12 persons, had to be evacuated from the bottom land near the main community.

After the ice, from spring breakup, went out, water levels dropped six feet in half an hour, apparently reaching a low point 12 feet above normal levels.

An Emergency Measures Organization spokesman said:

"The front of the ice jam now is 15 to 20 miles downstream from Fort Simpson and it would take an awful lot of water to bring levels high enough to threaten the com-

This is a plug for Volkswagen.

Volkswagen is the world's first plugged-in car.

No, we're not putting you on. We mean it. Every 1972 Volkswagen has a built-in system of sensor points spread throughout the car. They're in the critical areas, like the electrical system and the engine. And they all connect with a socket in the engine compartment of the car.

When the socket is plugged into a computer (available at your VW dealer this fall), the computer automatically checks things like ignition, compression, wheel alignment, and so on.

All without any chance of human error.

When it's done—and it doesn't take very long—the results are printed out in plain English. Sixty vital service checks. You can read them and discuss them right on the spot with the mechanic.

Now, all we need is a name for our plug. That's why we're running a special contest. Winners receive 22 days in Europe and a VW to bring home.

To enter: come into your Volkswagen dealer and test drive a '72 Volkswagen. Then come up with the winning name for the plug.

THINK UP A NAME FOR THE VW COMPUTER PLUG.
YOU COULD WIN 22 DAYS IN EUROPE AND A VW TO BRING HOME.

Collision Course Over Park Future

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

The federal government and private industry are on a collision course over how the national park at Long Beach should be developed.

And both sides see their program as the solution to ending the litter and pollution problem on the magnificent stretches of sand.

Private industry as represented by the Travel Industry Association of Canada is planning to lobby the federal government to permit private developers to construct a complete tourist complex within the park — including hotel, restaurant and swimming facilities.

Their argument is that areas like Long Beach will be littered with lunch bags, chocolate bar wrappers and worse as long as tourists are faced with wilderness and long distances to travel to service centres.

Not a whole string of hotels like a Coney Island, but one huge tourist development smack bang in the centre of Pacific Rim National Park.

Lawrence Ecroyd, the full-time paid executive vice president of the association is planning to collar federal officials on the idea next week.

★ ★ ★

However, Peter Bennett, assistant director of the National and Historic Parks Branch in Ottawa, was in Victoria this week and he gave a short answer to the private industry proposal:

No way!

Rather than build more facilities, the federal parks branch is planning to phase out those that are at present there.

Hotels and restaurants will be confined to areas outside the park and the only construction inside will be a system (eventually) of flush toilets and picnic areas with garbage cans.

This is the solutiin to pollution, the parks branch argues.

Pacific Rim National Park does not include the whole stretch of ocean front from Tofino to Ucluelet. From Tofino south for four miles is private land available for hotels and other tourist facilities.

A similar stretch of privately-owned ocean front is available to developers for four miles north of Ucluelet.

In between is approximately 15 miles of park beach that is to be off limits for developers, according to the present plan.

This ribbon of park is only between two and four miles wide but it stretches out to include the entrance highway for a considerable distance. This is to prevent construction of gas stations and motels at the entrance to the park.

★ ★ ★

Of the resorts inside the boundaries of the park, three have been purchased with government funds and are expected to be sold and moved.

Two others, the Wickaninnish Inn and Combers Resort, are yet to be purchased. The federal parks department is hoping to be able to make some park use of the Wickaninnish Inn so that it will not have to be destroyed. It is difficult to move.

Present facilities in the park — and only temporary — are a vehicle camping area with outdoor privies with holding tanks on the northern four miles of beach.

George Trachuk, federal supervisor of Pacific Rim National Park, says the measure is needed at present to handle the huge inflow of tourists — more than 300,000 per year.

But it is only temporary. Permanent flush toilets and picnic areas are part of the long-term plan.

The major problem lending urgency to the question is that the new low-level road to Long Beach will be paved and open in September.

A thundering increase in visitors is expected when the road opens because the only thing keeping many visitors away is wear and tear on the car or trailer on the mountain switchback road.

Will the number of visitors double?

"Nobody really knows," Trachuk said. "Any guess could be out a million per cent."

All that's certain is the numbers will greatly increase and the pollution and litter problems have to be solved quickly.

THE 15 MILES of sandy beaches will be without commercial development and will remain in its current state, as shown at the top picture, says the government in discussing the future of the Pacific Rim National Park at Long Beach. Spectacular Wickaninnish Inn, at right, will be purchased by combined federal and provincial government funds and may be put to some use in servicing the new park. Other resorts in park are being purchased and will be moved outside the borders of the park. Part of the litter on Long Beach that is the subject of controversy between government and private industry is shown below. The federal parks branch says picnic sites and garbage pails will solve problem, some businessmen feel a centralized hotel, restaurant complex would be a better answer.

Coast Money Exchange Hinted

VANCOUVER (CP) — The possibilities of developing a foreign exchange market in Vancouver are being discussed here this week by the Canadian Bankers' Association.

At present, foreign exchange markets in Canada are centred in Toronto and Montreal.

Vancouver offices of individual banks process foreign exchange transactions through the eastern centres, but these are subject to the limitations of the three-hour time difference.

The talks here are being conducted by members of the association's foreign exchange committee and their Vancouver counterparts in the international departments of the banks.

A CBA spokesman said prospects of a foreign exchange market in Vancouver are "most promising."

Far-Reaching Radar

OTTAWA (CP) — Joint Canadian-American tests of long-range radar-detection techniques will start this summer on Melville Peninsula in the Northwest Territories.

The project, named Polar Cap III, will be conducted by the Defence Research Board and the United States Air Force to evaluate over-the-horizon radar. OTH radar bounces radar waves off the ionosphere to extend its range beyond ordinary radar.

Radar receivers will be built at Hall Beach on Melville Peninsula and Cambridge Bay on Victoria Island. The facilities will be tested in the summer with actual experiments beginning next October and scheduled to end in August, 1973.

The project will cost $8 million dollars, of which Canada will pay approximately $1 million.

The Right Fiscal Medicine

• YOUR TAXES •

By I. H. ASPER

Finance Minister John Turner's first budget contains as much psychological therapy as economic or fiscal medicine. In that choice, he is quite correct. The cornerstone of his thesis is, as he puts it, that "confidence is contagious."

Just as previous finance ministers in recent years have had to react to an inflation psychology which has rationally or otherwise become rampant, Turner was required to bring to an abrupt halt the mood of gloom that has pervaded the economy for nearly three years.

* * *

Having about $1 billion to spend as he liked he had two options — shotgun the money, sprinkling it around in what could be classified as typical election year budgetry, or use it to really zero in on one or two problems in an attempt to solve them. He opted for the latter course.

In his action he had been responsible in a fiscal sense and wise in the ways of psychological warfare.

In one fell swoop the budget measures accomplish a number of things: Stimulate the job creating capacity of the private sector, warn out American trading partner that Canada will fight for its share of trade, maintain restraints against renewed inflation, keep a neutral posture on foreign investment, assure the business community that its contribution to economic growth is recognized, begin the process of smoothing out some of the jagged edges of the tax reform bill, and concurrently, make a tangible commitment to fair play for youth, senior citizens, veterans and the physically disabled.

In terms of political philosophy, it comes the closest to being classically liberal than most federal Liberal budgets in many years. It reaffirms Canada's faith in free enterprise but concurrently makes a major gesture toward the disadvantaged.

* * *

The budget speech gives tax watchers a tentative glimpse of the kind of finance minister Turner seeks to become. Notice that there is no attempt to establish artificial, temporary, hastily conceived, make-work government projects — a favorite device of many finance ministers when faced with unemployment.

Turner has faced squarely the reality that the best and most lasting jobs are those genuinely created in the private sector through increased productivity.

In this sense he has gambled. He would be well advised to order monthly reports from the department of consumer affairs to make certain that the abolition of the federal 12 per cent sales tax on the components of hearing aids and such is actually being passed on to the consumer in continuing reduced prices.

* * *

He would also do well to keep a sharp eye on corporate dividends for the next year.

If the manufacturing and processing companies simply use the corporate tax cuts to boost their stock prices by paying higher dividends, rather than use the tax savings to seek new markets and expand production facilities, business will have misunderstood Turner's message.

Should that be the case, it will be a long time before another finance minister relies on business assurances that the tax cuts produce expansion and new jobs. However, the gamble seems worth taking.

Turner also appears to be a man of strong social conscience. It is a welcome precendent to finally see pensions for the aged, veterans and incapacitated, tied to the cost of living. There may be less political rhetoric in future over these areas of social assistance, because of the automatic excalator clause.

* * *

There are defects in the plan, some major, others less significant. We face yet another deficit, this time $400 million. No steps were taken, nor assurances given, to guarantee an arrest in government spending habits. Nor did the budget recognize the regional nature of the economy by applying selective regional fiscal measures.

In this area, while the finance minister gave a welcome reassurance of his commitment to revenue equalization between wealthy and slow growth regions of Canada, this is still a band aid solution to the much deeper problem of regional income disparity. The real answer lies in selective regional economic and tax policies.

* * *

The other technical amendments to the Income Tax Act require detailed analysis before in-depth comment can be made. Turner makes some improvements to the new capital gains tax system but, more important, promises major revisions in the future to the whole system. In that area, his performance is yet to be measured.

But for starters, the new finance minister has earned the respect of the public by going a long way to restore confidence, and he's right — it is contagious.

Casper is a Winnipeg lawyer and leader of the Manitoba Liberal Party. Last week's column, through a mix-up in communications was a reprint of an earlier piece. The information was inaccurate because of changes in the tax law since it was written. The writer apologizes for the error.)

Bashed Boxcar Syndrome

MONCTON, N.B. (CP) — The victims of "brutal treatment" cost the Canadian National Railways about $3 million annually.

To make this clear the CN has adopted the old cliche "A picture says a thousand words" in a campaign to cut repair costs and perhaps, in the long term, lower freight rates in the Atlantic region.

The victims are freight cars which have suffered extensive damage because of careless loading and unloading practices by CN customers. Pictures of these cars are illustrated in a booklet prepared by the North American Association of Railroaders.

The association says damage to freight cars costs North American railways about $75 million a year.

A. A. Small, general superintendent of Atlantic Transportation, said here recently that costs to repair damaged boxcars are "inevitably reflected in higher freight rates in the region."

"And since the cars have to be taken out of service for repairs, it also affects our ability to provide customers promptly with the cars they need."

Mr. Small says bad practices include closing boxcar doors with forklift trucks, careless handling of forklifts inside cars, failure to secure moveable bulkheads and other loose items after cars are unloaded, and the ripping of steps, sills and other safety devices in attempts to move cars by hooks and cables.

Victorian Days Gets 'Stampeders'

The Stampeders visit Victorian Days with a Salute to Britain? That's the offbeat story of one of the entertainment highlights of the spring coming up in ten days time. After experimenting with a melodrama at the McPherson last year, the Victorian Days committee has opted for a variety and music show sponsored by Rothman's to be presented for four evenings beginning May 24.

Headlining the show will be the popular Canadian recording group, "The Stampeders." Originally a six-member group the boys have hit it big with "Carry Me" and "Sweet City Woman" chart successes since reforming as a trio. Rich Dodson is the guitarist who doubles on bass; Ronnie King is the funnyman of the group who plays bass and guitar and does impressions; and Kim Berly the drummer, who also plays guitar. They all sing, and they all write songs; and those who have seen them say they can hold their own on any stage with anybody, anywhere.

Perhaps the title of their first feature-length film about to be released tells the story: "Eight Year Overnight Success". In a 1965 issue of RPM, the Canadian music weekly, they were introduced as representatives of something called "West Beat". (Years later it was dubbed "Country Rock"; the Stampeders were ahead of their time.) In '66 they toured Eastern Canada, and the Toronto Telegram called them "The most dynamic group in Canada today". At Expo '67 the Montreal Star said "They were without a doubt the best to appear at the Garden of Stars". But it wasn't until 1971 that they were noted "Canada's Top Group of the Year."

Besides the Stampeders the Victorian Days show will feature Arden and Maisie, those fine British music hall entertainers, and multi-talented accordionist Ricky Mann.

Community Helps Plan Schools

TORONTO (CP) — When the new Balmy Beach school opens in Toronto's east end next year, it will probably look different from other elementary schools in the neighborhood.

When funds for the new building were approved last September, the Toronto board of Education invited community residents to lend a hand in designing it.

More than six months and 35 meetings later, school architect Ian Nicol has been presented with a series of briefs which he describes as "first-class research material."

One of them, on lighting, heating and cooling, rejects "the mass imposition of fluorescent lighting, minimum windows and total air conditioning," saying artificial illumination should be used to supplement the natural environment rather than replace it.

Another brief urged that the playground area include benches where elderly residents could come to watch the children. It also recommended covering part of the area as protection against bad weather and that there be a minimum of asphalt and hard surface.

MOZART CONCERT

An all-Mozart concert featuring the Victoria Conservatory of Music Orchestra, conducted by Sydney Humphreys, will be presented Tuesday at 8:30 p.m., at St. Matthias Hall, corner of Richmond Road and Richardson Street.

This will take the form of a concerto program, the soloists being top award-winning students from the recent Victoria Music Festival.

The Piano Concerto in B major, K 456, will feature Walter Prossnitz. Geoffrey Pearce will be soloist in the Horn Concerto in E-flat major and the violin-viola duo of Robert Winquist and Elizabeth Bredburg will perform with the orchestra in the Symphonie Concertante K 364.

Allen Reiser, City Medallion winner in the festival, will be soloist in the E-flat major Piano Concerto.

There will be no admission charge but donation may be made to the Conservatory of Music scholarship fund.

ART
glenn howarth

Spiders, Angel Feathers

In Vancouver, artists from the mother town's home team, and a few members of the Limners, are exhibiting at the newly-opened Mido Gallery. Works by Pat Martin Bates, Limner Robert De Castro, P. K. Irwin, Jack Kidder and Limner Elza Mayhew fill the premises at 936 Main St.

Jack Kidder's work more than holds its own in the big city, ranking Jack as one of the best B.C. sculptors who have dedicated themselves to the use of contemporary material.

Portrait of the Artist's Father is a new work. A three-foot-long, two-inch by three-inch bar of solid plexiglass has been sent into a half-circle. Laminated on the back of this bar are photos of old, worn knives in a kitchen drawer, photos of the gun beside Jack's father's bed, of a kitchen stove with exposed water heater, and of father's favorite chair. In the front of the semi-circle, deep inside the plastic, a panoramic serial of photos sweeps 180 degrees of the view from Dad's front lawn.

"Portrait" is a deep space collage trapping images in a theatre of ice. Photos pasted underneath come out through the front as well as refracting out of the top.

The bent bar sitting atop its curbed base calls to mind the shape of Toronto's city hall. A gold chain leads from the sculpture to a heavy plastic box containing Jack's family photo album. The lid comes up slowly under the hand, held back by the suction of air between tightly-fitting parts. Inside, snapshots date back to the invention of the camera.

Jack's family nostalgia could easily have fallen into sentimentality but it is secure. Images are drowned in the clear plastic, too far away to make the heart ache. Also, selling one's family album is not a sentimental act.

In what could be black and white Arabic script or loose Tibetan ritual pattern, Pat Martin Bates' delicate hand draws tiny snakes crawling through ethereal space. Known for her print-making, it is not her mechanically-produced spiritual symbolism that fascinates so much as her drawing. It is as though black marks were made with the leg of a spider and white marks with a quill made from an angel feather.

BATES

A wall of sculpture of Pat's, Snow Castle, looks as though it were made from the wings of an albino bat or perhaps again, angle wings? In reality, it is a No. 9 Simons steel wire brush that has been placed under a vacuum-forming machine. The bent and twisted bristles form a skeleton beneath a drape of molten plastic. Molded over the brush, the thin plastic sheet also forms a square dish with round corners in which the evocative excrescence sits.

Elza Mayhew's Pyramid Man is well-named. This heavy brass figure has a chest that steps downward like stairs. Heavy arms and a flattened baseball head are the only additions to the rectangular body except for two romanesque buttresses at the back which prop up the figure. Geometric and chunky, this piece of sculpture still conveys a human gesture. For all its abstractions, the possibility remains that this represents a living man. Quite incredible.

Robert De Castro's work came as no surprise. This sculptor is capable of making organized elements from random cracks in wood, chisel marks, saw cuts, and wood grain. But having carved a piece of sculpture, he paints over top of it a shroud, black, like the dye put onto shoe leather to hide imperfections.

The black gives a finished quality; it makes the wood look like ebony or argilite, a pity when close study of the surface always produces the reward of well-felt organization.

P. K. Irwin, like Pat Bates, is involved with the metaphysical. Pat Bates' work looks as though the drawings were made while in a sustained trance — like state, a state both comfortable to her and ethereal. P.K., on the other hand, stalks her metaphysic hoping to pounce on it. She succeeds in jumping in and terrifying herself — or seducing herself.

Going from one work to the next, there is always the caprice of an earthly mood. An etching-aquatint of fish forms is frightening, while Desert Fantasy, the best piece by P.K. in the show, edges toward sentiment. In this last-mentioned work P.K. has taken crude bark paper of irregular texture and has exploited the foggy brown natural accidents of the paper's manufacture. Colored nibs ink in a desert scene built of interwoven, curvilinear forms. Eyes as big as saucers must have been needed to organize such electric complexity.

Vancouver this week was filled with art. At the public gallery there, a Big Impact show has been put together from the gallery's solid collection of contemporary Canadian and American pop artists, colorists and sculptors. Andy Warhol's 16 versions of Marilyn Monroe hung side by side and one on top of the other, adding up to 144 square feet of acid color; depictions of Marilyn range from sad clown and ghost to tinsel witch. George Segal's "Execution" by itself is worth a trip to Vancouver.

Quints Year Old

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — The odds for such a birthday party are 4,000,000 to 1, but Polish quintuplets Adam, Piotr, Ewa, Roman and Agnieszka Rychert observed their first one Friday. Each baby had a cake of its own, supplied by their mother, Leokadia Rychert of Gdansk. Since their birth the three boys and two girls have been virtually adopted by the Communist government, Mrs. Rychert said jokingly.

COMING UP NEXT WEEK

Andy Stewart with soloists Mike Barth and Ron Buckingham under direction of George Gleeds, present the annual scholarship concert, Monday, in the MacLeath Building auditorium at 8 p.m. Choral works by Kodaly, Brahms, Mendelssohn, Grieg, madrigals, folk songs and Gilbert and Sullivan. Tickets at door.

Exploring World Of Sound

In the beginning there is science and art in close collaboration.

And in the culmination there is a child freely exploring the wonderful world of sound in a newly available dimension.

That, in outline, is the story behind A Playground of Musical Sculpture, which is currently to be seen at Open Space, 510 Fort Street.

It will be there until May 22.

From the giant's windbell made of different size pipes strung on a delightfully eccentric frame, to the Japanese koto-inspired cylinder, and the fun-and-games rocker that is also a percussion instrument, there is endless fascination in these new music-making inventions.

There is the delicate sweetness of a variety of marimba, the sonority of wooden organ pipes activated by vacuum cleaner power; the dark rich tone of great teak and ash wood keys.

The playground of musical sculpture is the concept of John Grayson, a musician and director of research at the Cowichan Centre for Gestalt Learning in Duncan and of U.S. sculptor Charles Mattox.

Last February the centre was awarded a $31,000 grant under the local initiative program, for the hiring of musicians, designers and artisans to work on the project.

As far as materials are concerned the order has been "scrap and scrounge" with many materials donated by industry — the koto strings are 300-pound test cod fishing lines, old iron tanks welded together make a resonator for the phosphor rods, steel drill bits mounted xylophone style give forth a delectable sound.

Color coding is used — red for instance represents the note E — and the entire playground is tuned to a highly consonant pentatonic scale. Consequently the children, even when playing the instruments at random, experience the feeling of being "in tune."

The exhibition, however, is only an indication of what the finished playground will be when it is finally established at the Duncan centre.

SISTERS explore a new world of sound and find it fascinating. Karen St. Pierre, at top, performing on the diamond marimba discovers for herself that played diagonally in one direction it produces a major broken chord, in the other, a minor, Shelly, at left, tries one of several methods of activating the cod-line strings of the giant koto. Scrap materials of many textures and resonances, spaces for crawling where the whole body can experience the reverberations when a fur-covered mallet strikes the rectangular wooden outside, are part of the fun and interest for young people of all ages in this playground concept.

Billy Jack's Simple World

A Film Review By WAYNE HARDING

Billy Jack is making the rounds again. A half a year ago we thought we'd never again see this film of morals and confrontation.

Liberal critics had patted the young filmmakers on the back for their effort. Conservatives, well accustomed to being offended by the artlessness of youth, had simply ignored it.

Now Billy Jack is back with more prestige than it ever could have attained with talent and taste.

The film deals with the troubles of a "Freedom School" of disaffected youth — Indians, blacks, chicanos, alienated whites — who are harrassed by a community of average American bigots.

The students are the good guys and do beautiful things like paint pictures, sing songs, groove on nature and swear without being embarrassed.

The average American bigots are the bad guys and do nasty things like drink beer, rape women, shoot horses and abide civic corruption. The world which screenwriters Frank and Theresa Christina create is quite simple.

The good guys would rather be left alone. But the bad guys, being what bad guys are, won't leave them alone and keep doing nasty things to them. It would all be quite hopeless if it were not that each time some evil is being done, out of the mountains (you can almost hear the bugle) rides Billy Jack — rugged, handsome, half-bred, ex-Marine, mystic — who, with a well-placed karate chop here and a deft homily there, makes justice triumph.

The drama may be naive. The direction of the cast of amateurs may be inadequate. The story may develop with less sophistication than a comic book adventure. But that means nothing to the thousands of young people who have flocked to see the film, booing the villains, cheering the hero, appreciating the banal wisdom of the writers.

These film-goers challenge us to judge Billy Jack not only as a piece of cinema but also as a "statement" of political and cultural consequence.

It's a disheartening task. Poor filmmaking is bad enough but we can live with it. Can we, however, accept the fact that there are thousands of young men and women in North America who see human nature is such superficial terms? Do they really see the differences in our civilization as so irreconcilable and so fundamental? Do they await a Billy Jack to ride out of the mountains and solve their hassles?

Yes, Billy Jack is a statement and a frightening one. For the solution the film presents to the problems it so credely defines is ironically a solution with a strong Nazi flavor — the kind of solution one might have expected of those average America bigots.

Contained within such a solution is the clear recognition of good and evil and the Superman — the folk hero whose roots are in the land and whose acts, no matter how vicious, make right. Billy Jack is the stuff from which Charles Manson are made — and Adolph Hitlers.

And Billy Jack has become something of a mythical hero to many North American young people.

It's all very disappointing. After all the love and struggle, the flowers and freedom, the Philistines are still at the gates.

BRENTWOOD DRAMA

One of Eugene O'Neill's early sea-going dramas and a minor classic among one act comedies comprise the playbill to be offered Wednesday and Thursday by the Brentwood College Drama Club.

Directed by T. Gil Bunch and designed and mounted by John Getgood of the Cowichan Valley Theatre Association, the plays will be performed in Brentwood College's new theatre-auditorium.

O'Neill's In the Zone explores the frictions and tensions built among a group of merchant seamen when they invade the privacy of one of their shipmates.

The Man in the Bowler Hat is a vivid contrast — A. A. Milne bringing all his unique sense of fun and fantasy to bear on a melodramatic search for The Rajah's Ruby.

Curtain goes up at 8 p.m. both nights. Ticket reservations can be made at $1.50 for adults and $1 for students by contacting Gil Bunch at the College, Mill Bay.

Plays From Prairies

Two Canadian one-act plays by Prairie author Elda Cadogan, and a scene from Oscar Wilde's The Importance of Being Earnest, will be performed by the St. Matthias Little Theatre Society Friday and Saturday.

The Cadogan plays are The Invisible Worm, directed by Mabel Sadler with Delaina Millham, Ed Rowley and Harry Duke in the cast, and Rise and Shine, directed by Vera Trueman and acted by Graham Thomson, Amanda Allen, Jack McIlveen and Gladys Higgins.

The Oscar Wilde scene involves only two people — Claudia Edwards and Joy Moncrieff—and it is directed by Jenefer Allen.

Starting time is 8 p.m. at St. Matthias Church Hall, corner of Richardson Street and Richmond Road.

Ticket reservations can be made by telephone, 385-5280.

6,000-Mile Trek Welded a Nation

By GEORGE EAGLE

What began in 1934 as a long march of retreat, by a group characterized for most of the outside world as a bunch of rag-tag bandits, has become enshrined in China and capitalized for the rest of the world as The Long March.

One of the survivors of that epic trek is Chou En-lai, now China's premier. Other survivors of the march have been familiar names through the years in the Chinese hierarchy of power: Mao Tse-tung, Lin Piao, Chu Teh, etc.

THE LONG MARCH 1935: The Epic of Chinese Communist Survival, by Dick Wilson. Thomas Nelson. $11.95.

The march was a searing experience that welded a nation. As University of California Prof. Franz Schurmann says: "The Long March has the symbolic importance to the Chinese that the October Revolution has to the Russians: it is the beginning of their road to victory."

That road looked anything but the route to triumph when the Communist First Front Army left their doomed Kiangsi Soviet in south-central China in October, 1934 — 100,000 revolutionaries on the run from the constricting encirclement of Chiang Kai-shek's Kuomintang forces.

The communists headed west, in effect a whole government on the road. A year later the 5,000 remnants would arrive in northern Shensi province — not their original destination — to set up a base camp at Yenan from which they would make temporary truce with Chiang to oppose the Japanese, use the Second World War years to spread the gospel and the gun through the countryside and eventually win a nation of 800 million.

Although it's known in China as the 25,000 li march, it actually covered 18,000 li, or 6,000 miles. It was a hell of a hike — like walking across the United States and back, but with enemy forces and suspicious locals to contend with, mountains to climb and rivers to ford, few decent roads and no fried-chicken stands along the way.

The main force of the first front army averaged almost one skirmish a day and had 15 full days of major, pitched battle; the force made 235 day-marches and 18 night marches, and if a 56-day extended halt in northwest Szechuan is discounted, they averaged one day's halt for every 114 miles covered.

MAO
. . . took charge

Dick Wilson, a British-born newspaper editor in Singapore, sets all this down in just about those textbookish terms. Most of his book is a compendium of data and eyewitness accounts already gathered by the late Edgar Snow, Helen Foster Snow (Nym Wales), Agnes Smedley, and Jerome Chen. The few times the narrative achieves a human dimension is when Wilson quotes from the previously published sources, and the eyewitness accounts (as Wilson cautions) must be watched for propaganda hooks.

"I am a piece of iron politically, but my legs fail me," says a 17-year-old "little devil" (as the youngsters on the march, some 12 and 14, were known) the day before he dies in the vast swamp called The Grasslands near Tibet.

Another teen-ager recalls: "On the sixth day in the Grasslands someone dug out a kind of aqueous plant the size of a green turnip which tasted sweet and crisp. Everybody at once searched for it. It proved poisonous. Those who ate it vomited after half an hour; several died on the spot. Death, however, could not be allowed to delay our progess. Unfastening the quilts on the martyrs and covering their bodies, we paid them the deep tribute all Red Army heroes warrant and continued to push forward."

Not only did the long march become an important symbol of sacrifice, but it provided a training ground for guerrilla tactics (in which running from an enemy advance is not the end of the game) and for winning the peasantry (instead of the urban proletariat on whom the Russians wanted to concentrate).

A more tangible and immediate political result of the march was Mao's assuming leadership en route. Mao had left Kiangsi in something near disgrace with the party, but by the end of the march he had taken effective command of party and military. (Mao rode a horse or was carried much of the way because of relapses from malaria.)

Wilson's book is of value largely as a single work that brings together the story of the long march, its historical context and dramatis personae, and an assessment of the legacy of the march to China and the world.

But the prose may prove hard going for the general reader. Sample: "In August another large group of 10,000 men, the VI Army Corps under Jen Pi-shih, Wang Chen and Hsiao Ke marched through the Juomintang lines to northeastern Kweichow where it linked up with Ho Lung's third army at Nanyaochier near Tungjen in October and formed, jointly with it, a new second front army controlling a Hunan-Hupei-Szechuan-Kweichow soviet base . . ."

One has that turgid prose or the effusive encomiums of Edgar Snow (who wasn't on the march but who visited post-march headquarters and interviewed survivors the following year). Mao himself wrote some poems that celebrate certain victories and milestones of the march by evoking images of nature. Wilson for calm analysis, yes; Snow for getting it first, yes; but for writing, I'll have to go with Mao, the man in the baggy boiler suit.

The Washington Post

China's long march ended in Yenan where Mao Tse-Tung lived in this cave dwelling, now a shrine, from 1943 to 1945. Like other survivors of the march, Mao kept his own plot of land nearby to supply his needs.

More Fables From Golding Explore Man's Condition

By ANTHONY JENKINS

William Golding is probably the least prolific British novelist of any importance. A new book from him is consequently something of a literary "event".

It is disappointing, then, to find that this collection of three noveletes is mostly a re-hash of old material. "Envoy Extraordinary", the third story of the group, was first published as far back as 1956 and has also appeared as a play, The Brass Butterfly. The second tale, "Clonk Clonk", seems closely related to an earlier novel, The Inheritors, and is not nearly so successful in its exploration of the primitive mind.

THE SCORPION GOD, by William Golding. Oxford University Press. $6.50.

The title story, however, does present Golding at his best and most typical. It takes place in ancient Egypt. Great House, the God-king in that particular part of the Nile valley, is beginning to slacken in his powers. The time has come for him to achieve his everlasting Now, so that the sky may continue to hold up over his subjects' heads and so that the water of the river will flood to a height that will bring life and fruition to the valley.

Golding hinges his tale upon two crucial moments. They are both provoked by one of the God-king's attendants, The Liar, who having seen strange things (such as snow and white men) refuses to take his place among the retinue that must sleep for ever in the king's tomb. Unable to understand his reluctance to attain Immortality, the priests are shocked when the Liar clings to life, blasphemously screaming that "this one is better". It is a turning point in civilization, and the story ends with a second moment of revelation as the Liar leaps to his freedom, asserting his own god-head.

In characteristic fashion, Golding uses his fable to explore man's idea of himself. His readers must constantly adjust their moral focus and re-examine their assumptions about life or death when confronted with an Egyptian society that sees death as the ultimate reward and which considers marriage to anyone but a close blood-relative as something illogical.

This refracted view of our modern standards is less successfully effected in the second story. The characters here are evidently pre-historic cave-dwellers. Through them, Golding makes several points about man's hunting instincts and about his attitude to those whose weaknesses put them apart from the norm.

But the inventiveness of the plot seems too complex for the job it is made to do. Having established the mystery and secretiveness of woman as opposed to the naive physicality of man, the fable has nowhere else to go. And Golding's clever sketching of primitive society seems labored.

The concluding story, "Envoy Extraordinary", though old stuff, stands in spirited contrast to the rest of the book. One forgets that Golding can be very funny. His dialogue here froths along in this spry little tale about a misunderstood Roman inventor.

By the end of the collection one is impressed, yet again, by Golding's individualistic view of mankind. For him, man is not simply something that evolved from the apes. The way we live now is the product of a constant change of customs, manners and beliefs.

And one suspects, from the way that Golding refuses to write directly about the present, that he feels that some of those changes have not always moved us forward.

Childhood Dreaming In Quicksilver Prism

By ANNE McDOUGALL

The rumors that preceded Sylvia Fraser's first novel, Pandora, have been disconcerting because rather rave. Now that I've read the book, it's not easy to know what to say. It's a relief to be excited and puzzled and piqued by any writing. And Pandora does that. How to describe it is another thing.

PANDORA, by Sylvia Fraser. McClelland and Stewart. $7.95.

Mrs. Fraser is highly talented and original and her originality extends to her choice of subject: an extraordinary leap into the kaleidoscopic perceptions of a little girl from her earliest days to age 7½.

Writing like quicksilver, and in the present-tense, the author lights up Pandora from all angles, the strongest spotlight falling on Pandora's feelings about herself. These are pretty wild, as is indeed to be expected from an "all-gifted" girl bent on opening a box containing every human ill.

How the modern Pandora gets to be that way is a question on which British psychiatrist R. D. Laing, critic of the politics of the family, might throw some light. Fortunately the book does not, with a few exceptions, turn into a sociological treatise. The story (novel doesn't really describe it) hurtles along, much as everyone's first 7 years seem to.

The author doesn't ask you to look back on your own childhood, but it's impossible not to. Pandora's dreams and conjurings belong to her own life, of course, with her hymn-singing mother, pent-up father, twin sisters and two grandmothers.

She happens to live on a very Canadian street in a ditto town and goes eventually to Laura Secord Public School. The Years are 1937-1945.

There is a background noise of War news. When spring comes, everyone on the street switches from Red River cereal to Rice Krispies.

This may not be your memory, but somewhere among the Valentine's Day box at school, the sorting out of best friends at recess, the poisoned cat (as well as the burned one whose tail was circulated in the classroom), the dirty breadman, boys' shack, the growing up days come back.

What makes this book unlike other books on childhood is the relentless tab the author keeps on the dark side of Pandora's room. To the world, the little girl with blonde hair streaming down her back is well-liked at school and leads her class. (Harold Town's drawings catch her beauty and precocity.) Yet all the time Pandora's stream of consciousness is running at a ferocious, spiteful and fantastically gory rate. "Has God put my eyes in backwards so all I can see is the meanness inside my own head?" she asks herself.

FRASER
. . . an original novel

It is true that baby Victor choked to death, leaving her father with 3 daughters and somewhat smothered in a female world. Is this why he pursues her with his artificially-hooked hand and throws her in the basement storage vault as punishment? Or can he simply not stand the mother's eternal hymn-singing?

Puritanism, Ontario-style, rears its wretched head. Pandora breaks into hymn lines herself, in moments of tension, but on the whole is more like her impulsive, outraged father.

The author avoids making fun of Pandora or making her cute or funny herself. For Pandora, the world doesn't seem particularly amusing, although she takes part in some comic neighborhood formalities. She does find it huge and sometimes exotic.

The ending takes a funny twist that seems to belong more to Mrs. Fraser than to Pandora. One of Pandora's grandmothers dies, leaving a small legacy. Her mother calls her aside and tells her she and her father are putting this in a fund for her education so that she can look forward to Another Sort of Life from the one they are able to give her. This introduces the element of Hope, found in the mythological Pandora's box and referred to at the beginning of the book.

While the mother's touchingly clumsy announcement has the effect of drawing Pandora closer to her for a page or two, as she turns over the concept of Another Sort . . . what Sort?? she is much more involved in coming first in her class again, planning to skip Grade 3, and collecting more than her share of "Yours 'til Niagara Falls . . ." for her memory book. Perhaps it is the adult who has been looking over her shoulder the whole time who needs the Hope.

PETER MURRAY—EDITOR

The Pleasures Of the Arctic

By JAMES McCOOK

Doug Wilkinson went into the Arctic to spend 15 months making a film for the National Film Board which won awards under the title "Land of the Long Day." He later lived with an Eskimo family for a year, wrote books and remains a victim of Arctic fever.

ARCTIC FEVER: The Search for the Northwest Passage, by Doug Wilkinson. Clarke, Irwin. $6.50.

He writes writes casually of flying his own light plane over some of the most remote lands and bays of the Canadian North and he is, without doubt, one of the modern company of prominent Arctic travellers.

This is not a pretentious work. It is written by a man who finds pleasure, as have others, in locating the notch on a rock in Frobisher Bay which was cut and used as a drydock by Martin Frobisher's sailors out of England in 1578. More than 4,000 years before these Englishmen, the same bay was visited by wanderers with an Eskimo way of life, known as the Dorset people, who, Wilkinson says, are considered the greatest foot travellers the world has known. By the 12th century, there were visitors of the Thule culture, probably out of Asia, and there may have been Vikings, too, out of Greenland.

The author quotes selected passages from the accounts of northern travel left by the first white explorers and marvels at the evidence of Eskimo knowledge of distant events. Three hundred years after the Frobisher visit, the native people had information on the fights which took place and the prisoners taken.

Wilkinson notes an Eskimo legend about a bearded old man and a young boy being washed ashore on the east coast of Hudson Bay. Might that have been Henry Hudson and his son who were cast adrift by the mutineers in 1611?

Later British explorers, wintering in the Arctic, were not all as efficient and careful of the health of their men as Sir William Edward Parry who took two ships and 94 men home to England after a winter in the ice with the loss of only one man. Wilkinson does not have the same admiration for Sir John Franklin, who died in the Arctic with 128 members of his expedition. He doubts Franklin was great; a career afflicted with recurring disasters leaves questions about this brave, if sometimes reckless, sailor.

Wilkinson's book is easy to read and will be enough for those with no wish to bog down in the icy wastes of Arctic detail. But Arctic enthusiast and Arctic casual alike will feel Wilkinson should have insisted on a better map than the one muddy item provided. The Arctic geography is confusing and only a good map makes the Northwest Passage enjoyable in an armchair.

When Rules Fit Whims

By GARY CLARKSON

A new Canadian publishing house, Concorde Press of Windsor, makes its debut in the market place of ideas and sensations with this tight little anthology by poets residing in the Windsor area.

CONTRAVERSE: Nine Poets, edited by Dorothy Farmiloe. Concorde Press, Windsor, Ont. $3.50.

It may be an auspicious occasion in Canadian letters for those in the know but for the layman like myself the occasion has been tarnished by the esoteric air which hangs over the collected pieces.

The verse seems to require a passport certifying initiation into the mysteries of the ultra-sensitive world where verbal color delights to dwell on the excruciating as well as the exquisite. Not possessing such a passport and not being privy to the esoteric, I warn the reader of my failings.

A peek into the land of dissociation, free verse, stream of consciousness and fantastic neuroses is still worth taking. The reader of whatever esthetic pedigree will be rewarded by a glimpse into a modern craft where rules suit whim, not custom or taste.

These poets, after all, are children of our time and their verses show it by an inability to penetrate beyond the circle of the momentary. Where are the great themes? Why is there no transcendence of the merely personal in order to attain genius?

There are sad salutes to historic greatness in these poems, though. Joyce Carol Oates' "Angel Fire" evokes a theological language which is all but dead in the West. "Son's Sun" by Peter Stevens is filled with old-time magic and wonder but still cannot rid itself of an intrusive subjectivism.

In short, a poetry which speaks to our time has its place, but a poetry which can only define the walls of consciousness throws us back on ourselves pitilessly. The Windsor Movement had best learn that the past and the future remain as solvents to the perplexing present and that analytic consciousness is not a substitute for imagination.

The Love Story Behind 'The Prophet'

By BEATRICE CARROLL

When Kahlil Gibran died in 1931 in New York at the age of 48, he had achieved considerable fame as an author and artist, not only in his native Lebanon and the Arabic-speaking world, but also in England and America.

In the years since then his reputation has been ever increasing, and today more than a million copies of his masterpiece, The Prophet, have been sold in America alone, and it sells at the rate of seven thousand a week.

BELOVED PROPHET: The Love Letters of Kahlil Gibran and Mary Haskell, edited by Virginia Hilu. Random House. $9.50.

His philosophies are quoted by college students, his words are incorporated in many modern wedding and funeral ceremonies, and his works have been translated into more than 20 languages. His paintings, though lesser, hang in galleries and in homes of private collectors; Rodin compared his work to that of William Blake.

There continues to be so much interest in this mystical man from Lebanon, home of many prophets, that additional information is found treasure to his worldwide audience. So "Beloved Prophet" is a mine that has yielded great riches, comprising as it does more than 500 letters and 47 journals previously unknown, and covering a period of 24 years in the secret relationship of the poet-philosopher-artist and his patron, friend and beloved woman, Mary Haskell.

Just who was Mary Haskell, and how did this curious man-woman combination begin, and flourish into an intense passionate affinity? When Kahlil Gibran met Mary Haskell, he was 21, a struggling young artist; she was ten years older, headmistress of a fashionable girls' school in Boston, and lovely to look at, if we can judge from Gibran's portrait of her.

He came from a poor family headed by a drunken father, in the Lebanon, and had emigrated at the age of 11 to America with his mother and her three other children. Mary Haskell, born in South Carolina, daughter of a bank president who was also a distinguished veteran of the Confederate Army, was a graduate of Wellesley and an educator.

This seeming incompatible pair met at the studio of a mutual friend and from then on forged a relationship that was complete in all aspects except that of sexual fulfilment.

In the early letters and journal entries there is talk of a possible marriage, and Mary's rejection on the grounds that she is too old, and that "Beloved Kahlil" must be free; and there are touching accounts of struggles against sexual desires.

As the years pass (the entries start in Paris in 1908 where Mary had helped him to go, and end in the year of Gibran's death), the mind and spirit are all-predominant. The records cover their absences and their infrequent meetings, mainly in New York where Gibran lived, or in Boston, Mary's home; they speak of their mutual work on his manuscripts — it is engrossing to see how "The Prophet" was created — the encouragements, the depressions, their thoughts of the physical and spiritual world, their religious beliefs, strengths and illnesses, and all their communications reveal the expression of their deep and trustful love.

From this 20-year testimony it can be seen that without the love and help of Mary Haskell, Kahlil Gibran might never have achieved the unique recognition which was his. She was his confidante in all things, his beloved mother — Mary sends him a warm overcoat and worries about his fragile health — his supporter, his gentle teacher who corrects his English, while she herself says "Kahlil's English is the finest I know; it is creative and marvellously simple." She was his complete woman, though never his wife, and one who would never have been an advocate of Woman's Lib.

The poet died in 1931 and is buried in Bsherri, his native village, where pilgrims pay visits to his grave as to a shrine. Mary Haskell, who in 1926 married an elderly cousin, died in Savannah, Georgia, in 1964 at the age of 91. "Beloved Prophet" is their mutual testament.

A Snub From National Drama Group

audrey johnson

In the months leading up to the big annual showcase event, Theatre Canada, a great deal of noise has been made about Canadian content in the theatre.

We have had the famous "Gaspe manifesto" in which the writers demand that Canadian content for publicly funded companies be set arbitrarily at 50 per cent.

There have been numerous articles published by experts in the field supporting this campaign and pro-Canadian play pronouncements have issued from the Theatre Canada sponsor, the Dominion Drama Festival Association.

Theatre Canada '72 opens its week-long program in Saskatoon May 21. Thirteen presentations will be seen, slightly more than 33 per cent of which will be of original Canadian scripts.

Which is not bad. Especially considering that, choice is made not only on Canadian content, but also has to take into consideration "provincial and regional representation and the facilities available at the National Arts Centre."

That sentence is abstracted from a DDF Theatre Canada form letter received by Victoria playwright Joan Mason Hurley.

Several things I find odd, if not incongruous, about this formal rejection of an original play that had been performed here at the Greater Victoria Art Gallery, and which the author was subsequently encouraged to offer as a Theatre Canada entry.

This is not a matter of debating the merits of the play, Death Seat, or its adaptibility to the up-coming Theatre Canada program.

It's understandable that to make a choice of 13 out of 40 applicants and to come up with "as complete a picture as possible of all aspects of the Canadian theatre scene today" is no easy task.

But to reject this short, successfully produced play as not meeting these specifications: (a) original Canadian content; (b) provincial and regional representation; and (c) facilities available at the National Arts Centre, is simply absurd.

The fact that this year's festival is being held in Saskatoon and not in Ottawa indicates that the form letter, unsigned but attributed to the 1972 National Festival Selection Committee, has not been up-dated.

In addition to which, Mrs. Hurley's play is not cumbersome as to length or staging. In fact it needs no facilities other than some simple lighting, as its Gallery production demonstrated.

As usual, too, the provincial-regional representation aspect gets a bit thin when it reaches British Columbia.

No possible quarrel can be taken with the inclusion of Company 1 which is to perform its original Mary in the Centennial Hall and the improvisational Nightplay and Tale Theatre in the Confederation Room of the arts centre.

But when we notice from the official playbill of Theatre Canada, that the "provincial and regional" representation from the East Coast consists of five plays — three from New Brunswick and two from Nova Scotia — it's no wonder that some people are left wondering about the representation of the festival.

This is not an advocacy specifically for Mrs. Hurley's play but merely an observer's comment.

But whether or not Death Seat should have had a place in the program, thereby upping the "Canadian content" and strengthening the area representation, the cursory and poorly substantiated manner of its rejection has all the aspects of a snub.

THE GALLUP POLL

Canadians Favor Equalization

BY THE CANADIAN INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC OPINION

The big majority of Canadians (73%) endorse the Government's equalization payments to the "Have Not" provinces. This is an almost six to one ratio of approval over the 13% who object to the programme.

This high acceptance of the plan, whereby national income is distributed by taking from the wealthy provinces — Ontario, Alberta and B.C. — and giving to the poorer "Have Not" provinces, wins approval in all regions. In the Maritimes almost nine in ten, believe it is a good idea, with about one in ten undecided. In Ontario and the West over seven in ten support the principle. In Quebec, while still a majority approval, the level drops to 67%. Men and women in the Western provinces show the highest ratio of disapproval, rising to a level of 20%, as compared to a low of 10% objection in Ontario.

Following a B.C. proposal to ask the Supreme Court to decide on the issue, this question was put to a national sample of adults, 18 years of age and over:

"As you may know the federal government has developed a program whereby financial assistance is given to the 'Have Not' provinces, that is those with a smaller population or less industry than say, Ontario, Alberta and B.C. In general, do you approve, or disapprove of this program?"

The table below shows the response — nationally and regionally.

	Approve	Disapprove	Undecided
Canada	73%	13%	14%
Maritimes	89	—	11
Quebec	67	16	17
Ontario	72	10	18
The West	73	20	7

Citizen Advocates Proposed for Handicapped

OTTAWA (CP) — A new type of volunteer, a "citizen advocate" for mentally impaired or handicapped persons, has been suggested by D. Wolf Wolfensberger, visiting scholar at the National Institute on Mental Retardation at York University, Toronto.

In a recent issue of Canada's Mental Health, a health department publication, Dr. Wolfensberger described citizen advocacy, begun in some North American centres in 1966. It now will be tried by the Canadian Association for the Mentally Retarded in a pilot project in Kingston.

"A citizen advocate is a competent citizen volunteer who, with the support of an independent back-up system, represents, as if they were his own, the interests of another person who is in some way impaired or handicapped," he said.

Depending on the needs of the impaired person, advocacy roles can be formal or informal and either short- or long-term, even life-long.

Formal roles would include adoptive parenthood, guardianship or property caretaker, he said. Informal roles include friendship and guidance.

MANY WAYS TO HELP

Both could emphasize the personal relationship and an exchange of affection and concern, although there is a place for "instrumental advocacy," which would concern only the solution of some practical problem.

"Perhaps the most perfect type of advocacy occurs when a citizen chooses to rear as his own, and perhaps adopt, a handicapped and neglected child," he said, adding that there also are other roles that are less demanding and much needed.

"Among these are the provision of transportation, counsel or other services for the handicapped child of a family who love and accept him but lack the means to solve the . . . problems. An advocate can make certain that the child gets the education and training which the community has a responsibility to provide."

Advocates can sponsor institutionalized children without families to care for them, visiting, giving gifts, taking them on trips or entertaining them at home, Dr. Wolfensberger said. Handicapped adults also can be helped in these ways.

Agencies are limited in providing these kinds of services because of impersonality, rigidity, lack of continuity in relations with clients and by conflicts of interests between the agency and the professional workers, he said.

HAS NO LOYALTY

"In contrast to professionals working as employees of agencies, the volunteer is free of loyalties to any profession or agency. . . . He is a volunteer to a specific person, not to an agency."

Even if the volunteer should occasionally become irrationally concerned on behalf of his dependent, "it is still better to have such irrational involvement on behalf of the voiceless than to have none at all," he said.

"After all, parenthood is frequently irrational in its representation of child interests, but we accept this as being culturally normative."

None of the ideas relating to the citizen advocate are new or unique, but have been proposed by groups such as Big Brothers, he said. However, the idea of an independently-financed, unified system to handle all the aspects of advocacy is new and unique.

Dr. Wolfensberger said that citizen advocacy "may well become a major helping form, paralleling the more traditional agency service structures."

B.C. Miners Rewarded For Rescue

PITTSBURGH (CP) — Twelve British Columbia men have been awarded bronze medals for heroism for helping rescue a fellow-miner from a rock fall, the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission announced Friday.

The commission awards medals annually to people in North America for rescues involving extraordinary life risks.

The 12 B.C. men were cited for their efforts in rescuing Gilbert Mosses from a rock fall in a lead and zinc mine in Salmo, April 18, 1969.

They are Andrew Burgess, Edward A. Lawrence, Joseph Laurent Heroux, Ian F. Stewart, Edward M. Gladi, Brian D. Martin, and Graham D. Bingham, all of Salmo; Dale R. Burgess, Wayne R. Ritter, John Voykin and Alphonce Grotkowski, all of Ymir and Carl A. Shelrud of Merritt.

Mosses, 53, was knocked into a loading chute by a fall of ore and was covered by rocks except for his head and one arm. The 12 spent 3½ hours working to free Moses, who was severely injured in the accident but later recovered.

Soviet Marshal Dies

MOSCOW (Reuter) — Marshal Nikolai Yakovlev, 73, a chief of Soviet artillery during the Second World War, has died, Tass news agency reported Thursday. After the war he became a deputy minister of the armed forces and deputy commander-in-chief of air defence forces.

BLOOD DONOR CLINICS SCHEDULED

Seven blood clinics in Greater Victoria over the next two weeks have an objective of 925 donors, the Red Cross said Friday.

The clinics will be held Monday to Friday of next week and Tuesday and Friday the following week.

Monday's clinic will be at Red Cross House, 1046 Fort, from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. and 6:30 to 9 in the evening.

Tuesday the clinic will be at Canadian Forces Base, Esquimalt, from 9 a.m. to noon and 1:15 to 4 p.m.

The three other clinics next week will be at Victoria high school, Oak Bay and Claremont senior secondary schools.

Life for Robberies

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Richard Black received a life sentence Thursday after being convicted of robbing the same drugstore six times. Employees at Thelpan American Sundry Store said each time the 30-year-old Black paid a visit he would pull a gun and demand $100 in cash and a carton of cigarettes.

Economic Crisis Hits 'Land of Plenty'

MONTEVIDEO (WP) — The recent history of Uruguay's national airline, called Pluna, tells a great deal about why this one-time land of plenty is in a deep economic crisis.

Pluna has a thousand white-collar workers and one airplane, according to an irate customer, himself a high government official.

Actually it has one jet, which was accorded state honors when the crew delivered it from the United States three years ago. To the embarrassment of all, an unusually zealous customs agent looked inside and found contraband refrigerators and television sets strapped in the seats.

Now it turns out that the plane does not even belong to Pluna but is contracted from a Spanish company.

One of the jet's engines is due for overhaul and the company has no funds to pay for it, so Pluna is on the verge of turning the plane over to the Argentine Airlines to cover an overdue debt.

The half-hour flight across the River Plate to Buenos Aires was always Pluna's money run, not just for the price of the tickets but also for the duty-free sales of liquor and North American cigarettes aboard.

"Uruguay is a country on vacation," said the finance minister of the new government, Francisco A. Forteza, in trying to explain such capers. "It is for this reason that we are bringing a new generation into the cabinet." Forteza is 44 and the country's new president, Juan Maria Bordaberry, is 41.

The new government's first task will be to do something about Uruguay's economic problems. Inflation — 36 per cent last year — is now estimated to be running at an annual rate of 100 per cent.

The outgoing government used up foreign-currency reserves to create a pre-election prosperity while all-important beef exports were declining sharply.

Hence the lack of funds to pay Pluna's bills, and hence a trip by Forteza to the United States next month to try to borrow his way out of the crisis.

Like Argentina and Chile, its two neighbors in the southernmost part of America, Uruguay is weighed down with foreign debt. Forteza estimated it at more that $500 million, including a lengthening list of debts on current imports.

The debt is about 30 per cent of the gross national product. Uruguay's population is 3 million.

Chile's and Argentina's debts are even higher proportionally, but while the Chilean economy is expanding, and the Argentine economy is at least holding its own, Uruguay's is estimated to have shrunk last year.

Forteza stressed that dry weather was a major factor in the drop in beef production on which the country depends for foreign exchange.

He said exports are climbing again, and be discounted the importance of what is often cited as the major reason for loss of dollar income — the smuggling of cattle across the border to the higher-price market in Brazil.

The new government devalued the peso until the dollar-exchange rate made exporting profitable again for the cattlemen, but it also raised export taxes.

Forteza said this was necessary to avoid windfall profits for the country's 300 main cattle raisers. Uruguay, like many Latin American countries, leans to export taxes because the alternative — steeper income taxes — prove hard to collect.

In another effort to increase exports, Forteza has begun a partial ban on meat consumption. The ban is to become total in a few months.

This cutoff of meat, a twice-a-day staple for most Uruguayans, adds to the bleak aspect of a city browned out at night to save electricity and scarred with abandoned construction projects.

Workers are striking because the wage increase decreed to accommodate the 36 per cent inflation was fixed at 20 per cent.

"We cannot afford more," said the finance minister.

Forteza is to be in Washington May 15-16 and he hopes to see treasure secretary John Connally. He will meet also with the International Monetary Fund, to which Uruguay has applied for $18.5 million in compensatory financing to offset the drop in export earnings. Argentina and Chile both received such loans.

After that, Forteza hopes to negotiate an IMF standby loan, which Argentina and Chile took drastic measures to avoid as an encroachment on their sovereign right to manage their own economies.

If the IMF and Forteza agree to a plan for regaining monetary stability and the standby loan is granted, he will use it as insurance in his subsequent effort to borrow new funds in Europe and from a consortium headed by First National City Bank in New York.

School Buses Haul Youths To Jail

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (UPI) — Police dispatched school buses to 10 high and junior high schools Thursday to haul youngsters to jail in what was termed the largest narcotics raid in Tennessee's history.

The two buses were used to pick up 59 of the 120 persons named in secret warrants issued following a 3½-month undercover investigation.

The roundup began at 10:30 a.m. when buses pulled up to various schools and police officers handed over lists of the suspects to the principals.

"The principal just sent messengers to the various classrooms and asked the students involved to report to the principal's office," said Police Commissioner Gene Roberts. "When the students got to the office they were taken into custody."

Roberts said none of the students offered resistance. "All of them were charged with selling, not possession," Roberts added.

The youngest suspected pusher, who allegedly sold LSD to an undercover officer, was listed as 14 years old. Roberts said several undercover agents, including some students, were used in the operation, which he said should "put a big dent in the drug traffic but not dry it up."

So you think you know British Columbia?

Prove it by identifying these 6 famous B.C. sights-

From the sandy beaches of Vancouver Island to the towering peaks of the Rockies, from the Peace River plains to the orchard valleys of the Okanagan and Kootenays... this province of ours is a land of immense scenic variety. A land in which the natural and man-made wonders are almost beyond number. The six photographs at right depict some of our famous sights. If you can identify them all, you might claim to have a fairly good grasp of the varied attractions of British Columbia. But whether you can or not, these illustrations should serve as a reminder that our province is a uniquely exciting holiday area. So exciting that thousands of tourists each year visit our province to enjoy a range of scenic beauty they just can't find at home. This year, pretend you're a tourist in the greatest tourist country anywhere—your own home province of British Columbia.

For a detailed guide to highways, points of interest and accommodations throughout our province, visit any British Columbia Information Centre. Or write: British Columbia Department of Travel Industry, 1019 Wharf Street, Victoria, British Columbia.

Pembroke Castle, Birthplace of Henry VII

Welsh Visitors Can Depend On Meeting Cult of Castles

By JEROME ROBERTS

CARDIFF — No visitor to this picturesque land can leave it without retaining an awareness of Welsh castles. Whether one comes to Wales for the long unspoiled stretches of sandy coast, the salmon fishing, the mountain peaks, the meeting of a score of nations in the Llangollen International Eisteddfod, or the opera in Cardiff, sooner or later he'll end up inside a castle.

Once there were more than 300 of them, proud symbols of the sovereignty of local landlords or the determination of conquerors to hold what they had taken. Two-thirds have almost entirely disappeared, their only relics the tumbling walls in leafy lanes, the mounds of stones used by farmers as cattle shelters, the gateways cunningly incorporated into modern houses.

HUNDRED STANDING

But almost a hundred still remain in a splendidly arrogant state of preservation, survivors into the space age of the power that was wielded centuries ago — from lordly Caernarvon in the northwest, the birthplace of the first Prince of Wales, to Caerphilly in the southeast, the second largest fortress in Europe. Only Windsor is bigger.

Many were constructed towards the end of the 13th century by King Edward I, the English hammer who managed to pound the Welsh into something resembling submission.

Caernarvon, its eagle tower rising like an accusing finger against the skyline, is where the son of Edward I was born. Since the male heir to the throne of Britain has always taken the status of Prince of Wales, and in the summer of 1969 the age-old echoes of splendor and ceremony were re-awakened when Prince Charles was invested as the latest Prince of Wales.

DISASTERS

Not all the echoes that linger within these old castles are so happy. Flint, on tthe contrary, shelters the memory of royal disaster and disillusionment.

This is where Richard II was captured by Bolingbroke in a scene immortalized by Shakespeare. Stand under Harlech's walls on a silent summer morning and it is not difficult to imagine the cries of the beseigers and the taunts of the beseiged. Here Dafydd ap Ifan ap Einion endured a long and devastating onslaught during the Wars of the Roses.

Harlech is one of many castles set in a superb panorama. From its turrets, where sentries once looked out eagerly into the morning light for the first signs of the approaching enemy, the view sweeps round from the peak of Snowdon, Wales' highest mountain, across the curving bay below, to the top of Plynlimon, 40 miles away.

AIR SERVICE

Both Cambrian and Northeast Airlines, subsidiaries of British European Airways offer good air service to Wales and the airports serving Wales (Manchester, 41 miles from the border, and Liverpool, 20 miles away). For those combining a trip to Wales with visits to Ireland or France there are Cambrian operated services from Cork and Paris to Cardiff.

For further information on Wales and Welsh holidays contact the British Tourist Authority at 151 Bloor Street West, Toronto.

Prefab Burial

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A gigantic honeycomb of concrete cells has been laid in the earth of Holy Cross Cemetery to provide prefabricated burial plots. Grave-diggers said the individually dug graves are things of the past, said Thom McGrath, cemetery superintendent. The 2½-acre honeycomb containing 5,000 cells will accommodate 10,000 persons with two burials for each cell.

Plastic Greenhouses Prairie Farm Aid

WINNIPEG (CP) — Greenhouses made of hoops supporting a plastic film covering may some day extend the all-too brief growing season for commercial and domestic gardens on the prairies.

Dr. Joseph D. Campbell of the University of Manitoba plant science department has studied the mini-greenhouses for two years and feels they may come into wide-spread use in Western Canada.

With the plastic protection and an electric heating cable, he grew small red peppers in Winnipeg as late as Oct. 25 in 1971. The peppers are especially hard to grow in Manitoba's cold.

In a 1970 experiment, mini-greenhouses significantly lengthened the growing season of marketable tomatoes and boosted yields 28 per cent.

"If we hadn't gone back for Paul's camera- we'd never have discovered our silver candelabra."

It was an incredible bargain (at least half the price you'd have paid at home). And certainly, one of the luckiest finds of your entire roam-around-antique hunting holiday in Britain.

You'd stayed overnight at Brighton and were well on your way to London before you missed your camera. So you changed your plans and headed back again. And that's when you saw them; the silver lanes of Brighton, tucked away in a section of the resort you'd never noticed before. Hustling and bustling and an absolute treasure trove of silver mementos, curios and antiques.

Sure, it was a lucky turn of events and one that wouldn't have happened if you hadn't had your own car—and the holiday independence to go where you want—when you want. And change your plans at the last moment if you felt like it.

Independence Holidays: your car and hotel for just over $12 a day per person.

This summer, because we think an airline should offer more than just a "seat" to Europe and back, we worked out ways to give you all the holiday independence you could want—at the best price. And they're all Air Canada exclusives.

Like an Avis car with special economical rates—from $10.25 a day with unlimited mileage. And three types of accommodation starting at only $7 a night in over 500 hotels in 20 countries. (All offers are based on two sharing and must be arranged before you leave).

And although they're all 7 day minimums—the days needn't be consecutive; you can scatter them over your entire stay, buy several packages, mix and match to suit your plans.

Another Independence offering is our "Open Jaw" option. You can fly into any of our 11 European destinations, tour around and leave from whichever city is closest to you—for little or no extra charge.

All this on top of a new 22-45 day excursion fare that's almost as low as charter. But unlike charter—we don't tell you when you have to go and come home. Every day of the week this summer, our famous Western Arrow flight leaves direct for London (including non-stop on Friday)—and you could be on it. You just book and go—and you can change your return date in Europe. Your children under 12 can fly for half fare. And you can charge it all on your credit card.

Add it all up; the holiday values, the new fares and the daily Western Arrow flight—then work it out. The charter "seat". Or the Air Canada holiday. Which is really the better bargain? Ask your travel agent. And come see what you've been missing.

Which is really the better bargain?

Move Over, World...The Maldives Awaken

By MORT ROSENBLUM

MALE, Maldives (AP) — The president has decided to let the world into this coral-speck republic, but it won't be easy. For one thing, the Maldives' only hotel has no can opener.

Sitting alone in the Indian Ocean, the Maldives has blended the politics of Haiti and the physiognomy of Morocco with the society of Alice's Wonderland.

There are no banks or bars. The only fire engine is on the wrong island, waiting at the deserted air strip across the lagoon in case the bimonthly charter from Ceylon crashes.

Twelve thousand Maldivians live under strict Moslem code on the half-mile by one-mile capital island, with another 100,000 spread over 2,000 islands strewn across the Equator.

A British family of four and some Ceylonese and Indian teachers are the only foreigners in the country. Queen Elizabeth is the only head of state who has ever visited.

There is almost no recorded history. Maldivians, immersed in family intrigues, won't commit anything to paper and no foreigner knows enough about the situation.

Britain, which leases an air station in the Maldives, sends in diplomats only a few days a year.

President Ameer Ibrahim Nasir was elected in 1968 when the nation became a republic. He had been prime minister to the sultan who stepped down from the office his family had held for centuries.

Nasir immediately withdrew into his Aladdin-style palace, insisting on making practically every government decision, usually by letter.

Queen Elizabeth's visit not only brought him out in public for the first time in years, but gave some of his ministers their first look at the inside of his headquarters.

The Maldives shed British protection in 1965 and became the United Nations' smallest member. It maintains relations with 19 countries, including East and West Germany and North and South Korea.

The harbor is so empty that visitors can see angel fish swimming in crystal clear water at the main customs wharf. Still, there is heavy traffic of "bugaloos" and doanies, artfully constructed sailing craft used by fishermen to bring in the country's major wealth.

The Maldives also runs an astonishing fleet of 32 merchant vessels that carry two to three million tons of tramp cargo a year, but they seldom call here. Few persons see the accounts of the National Trading Corporation, which runs the ships and all commerce, though it is clearly making money somewhere.

Maldivians stay clear of such matter, living behind the North Africa-like whitewashed walls and thatch fences along white sand streets.

Most avoid even speaking the president's name, looking coolly at a spot on a distant wall when it is mentioned. Two officials were punished for taking reporters covering the Queen to the wrong gate at the palace compound.

Nasir has chosen to encourage tourism on a moderate scale, bringing in a Ceylonese to manage an eight-room hotel in a converted warehouse. Though it lacks a can opener, it sells the only liquor around.

Male is flat as a flounder, with winding lanes, a few straight streets, tall minarets and about 40 vehicles. Cluttered shops sell Japanese watches, Burmese rice and English patent medicine from the same shelves. Two stores, marked ambitiously "restaurant," sell curries and tea made from leaf dust.

Men run the central market and occupy the cafes. Koranic law allows each man four wives and easy divorce, but times are changing, with 2,000 youths in school and many going overseas on scholarships.

Despite the firm Moslem code, the government radio broadcasts an American gospel program because it pays well. It also relays news from London, Peking, Sydney and Paris.

"Today Maldivians are a hardy race with very simple minds and generally lacking in the sophistication of modern civilization," reads an engagingly frank information department brochure.

But they can't be far behind. The same department tried to charge a dozen correspondents $18 each for a truck that carried them three-quarters of a mile, following the Queen.

About 60 tourists visited the Maldives in the first 10 weeks of 1972, including 30 Italians who chartered a plane to skin dive among the incredibly rich coral reefs.

Drug Hunting Jennie's Game

MONTREAL (CP) — Sniffing out drugs is as simple as fetching a bone for Jennie, a sleek, black Labrador retriever which has become the pride of the RCMP narcotics squad here.

Since Jennie was taken on the squad more than 18 months ago, she has been credited by police with sniffing out "millions of dollars worth of drugs" at Montreal International Airport and on the waterfront.

Her biggest find was a multi-million-dollar shipment of heroin hidden in a foreign automobile being unloaded on the waterfront early in 1971.

At the airport in February this year, she sniffed out a large shipment of hashish hidden in the lining of coats shipped from Afghanistan.

Constable Ray Gauthier, her master, says Jennie, 2½ years old, "doesn't only have a nose for heroin and pot."

He says Jennie's native intelligence and retrieving ability has been trained to such perfection that she can pick up the scent of LSD, the tasteless, odorless and colorless hallucinogen, sealed in a tin container inside a suitcase.

"It may sound unbelievable," says Constable Gauthier, "but for Jennie, drug hunting is child's play and all part of a big game."

Jennie was trained at the RCMP kennels in Alberta and then was brought to Montreal with her master for a tryout. She was so successful that the RCMP have five other dogs trained last summer to assist drug squads in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Ottawa and Toronto.

A second dog was taken on here to assist Jennie in her work.

"It takes about four to six months to train a good, alert Labrador to detect drugs," says Constable Gauthier, an expert trainer who gained his knowledge of dogs while overseas with the Canadian Armed Forces.

"A trainer once told me there wasn't a thing in this world a good retriever couldn't track. I kept this in mind, and when talk began of using the retriever to locate illicit drug shipments I offered to train Jennie."

SPOTTED HASHISH

When Jennie first came to Montreal, her biggest problem was to overcome a fear of large crowds. Labradors are calm and gentle animals, her master says, so he decided to take her window shopping at a downtown shopping centre to help her get used to the hectic pace.

"We were standing next to a couple of youths when all of a sudden she bit a mouthful of hash from the back pocket of one of the boys. It was her first and most unexpected haul."

A dog's power to smell is 40 times sharper than that of a human, says Constable Gauthier. The power was one of the most sensitive things in nature.

"The secret of a proper training is not actually teaching the dog to do anything, but giving him the utmost courage in all things that you want him to do while at the same time discouraging his faults."

Greenpeace On Schedule

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Greenpeace Three mission, sailing the South Pacific to protest a planned French nuclear test, has reported to its headquarters here that their 35-foot ketch arrived at Raratonga in the Cook Islands Friday with all aboard in good condition.

Dorothy Metcalfe, wife of Ben Metcalfe, Greenpeace chairman and expedition member, said here the vessel had put in for fuel, water and provisions and would stay at Raratonga for three or four days.

She said the vessel has covered 2,100 miles in 14 days and will sail against the Trade Winds due east to Mururoa, site of the French atomic test scheduled for June.

SPECIAL SAIL
The best cruise bargain sails June 18th.
It's only $20 a day—one way or full cruise—to Suva, Auckland, Port Moresby, Manila, Hong Kong, Keelung, Kobe, Yokohama, Honolulu, Los Angeles.
On June 18th, 1972 the 550-passenger S.S. UNIVERSE CAMPUS sets out on a fascinating 78-day Circle Pacific Cruise from Los Angeles with Chapman College's Summer Adult Education Program.
But here's the exciting news:
Orient Overseas Line has reserved a block of cabins for non-student passengers at incredibly low fares—$20 a day, inside room . . . and $25 a day, outside room.
This will be a relaxed, informal cruise with many planned activities. And you'll particularly value the long stops at each exotic port.

CP Air's World:
We get you where the good times are.

A holiday is meant to be a lot more than two plane rides connected by some sightseeing trips. A holiday is meant to be fun, an experience. Something worth waiting and saving for. CP Air would like to help you make sure that your holiday will be something to remember for a long, long time. So we have put together a collection of vacations in some of the most exciting places in the world. They're not expensive. But they are planned by experts to give you the most for your money and your time. Here are a few examples. Your travel agent has lots more.

HAWAII
15 days from $129 plus air fare
Honolulu: the orchids bloom year round and the sun never gets tired of shining. Your vacation here includes accommodation in the fabulous beachside Holiday Inn, a cruise around the harbour and a special Hawaiian lei greeting. And as you lie on the beach, eating papaya and watching the surfers ride the waves, you'll know what a vacation was always supposed to be. IT1CP1TW4A.

MEXICO
17 days from $167 plus air fare
You'll start in Mexico City and have time to discover the art treasures and the shopping and the nightlife. Then we'll take you to Taxco where the whole village has been declared a national monument. And finally, Acapulco: the bay, the beaches, flowers, smiles, and brown bodies in the sun. This one price includes hotel accommodation and trips to some of the sights we wouldn't want you to miss and lots of time to be yourself and and discover things for yourself. IT2CP1MT11.

SOUTH AMERICA
29 days from $1465 plus air fare
Here's a camera safari designed by photographers for photographers. And what a safari! You'll see Lima and the ruins of Machu Picchu, a jungle camp on the Amazon, primitive Indian villages, the art treasures of Quito. You'll even spend a week in the Galapagos Islands. A photographic director will go with you and the group is limited to 25 people. Includes accommodation, ground transportation, many meals. IT2CP1WWT1.

THE ORIENT
17 days from $494 plus air fare
The Orient is very different from anything you've seen before, but this vacation will make it a little less inscrutable. You'll be taken to modern Tokyo and the beautiful, unchanging city of Kyoto. You'll see ancient temples, the spectacular scenery of the Japan Sea, and all the bustle and bargains of Hong Kong. Includes hotels, sightseeing, ground transportation and some meals. IT1CP1CD01.

ISRAEL
16 days from $339 plus air fare
Israel is many different and surprising things. It's long sweeping beaches and resorts that equal the most fashionable in the world. It's holy places like Bethlehem, Nazareth and the Sea of Galilee. It's the bright lights and excitement of Haifa and Tel Aviv. This vacation will take you to all of these and much more. Includes ground transportation, sightseeing, most meals, and accommodation based on three sharing. IT2CP1S133.

GREECE
23 days from $167 plus air fare
In this vacation we'll help you plan to see whatever you want to see. The first five days we'll show the classic sights in and around Athens. After that the choice is yours. You may want to spend all your time in Athens – hotel and half board are included. There are many optional cruises of the Greek Islands. Or you may choose the sunny beaches of a little Greek resort. IT2CP1T550.

SPAIN
23 days from $228 plus air fare
When you arrive in Madrid, an Avis U-Drive car will be waiting for you. There's a basic route planned with first class accommodation booked in places like Madrid, Granada, Seville, including a week at the Playamar resort on the Costa del Sol. So you travel with friends but get the cost advantages and planning assistance of a tour. Includes car with unlimited mileage, all accommodation and some meals. IT2CP1TO25.

FIJI
17 days from $225.25 plus air fare
Few places on earth can equal the magic appeal of the South Pacific: the long, white sand beaches, crystal clear blue waters, market places piled high with yams, bananas, taro and breadfruit. Your vacation will take you on cruises and sightseeing trips, to island feasts and traditional dancing. And it will give you lots of time to do nothing, beautifully. Includes accommodation, cruises, sightseeing and some meals. IT1CP1TT01.

PORTUGAL, SPAIN AND MOROCCO
21 days from $384 plus air fare
Three fascinating countries all in one specially priced vacation. You'll start with a visit to the stately avenues and fountain-filled squares of Madrid. Then you're off on a tour of Morocco's imperial cities: Tangier, Rabat, Marrakech, Fez. Back in Spain, you'll have four relaxing days on the Costa del Sol, then on to Seville and Lisbon. All hotels, ground transportation, sightseeing and some meals are included. IT21B1S119.

HOW TO BUDGET FOR YOUR VACATION
Many of your major costs are included in the one price, as described in each of these vacations. This way you can benefit from the special rates that we can get. Unless otherwise stated, accommodation costs are based on two people sharing, and a single room would cost slightly more. You should add on the air fare from the applicable city. These are shown in the box below. Peak season fares will be slightly higher during June, July and August. Now you have a pretty good idea of your total vacation costs. And if you would like to budget those costs, we can help you out with our sensible Fly Now – Pay Later plan.
And now you probably want more details. And your travel agent has them: colourful folders with complete itineraries, and lots of personal, expert advice. All free. Just give him a call or phone the International Travel Adviser at any CP Air reservations office.

COAST TO COAST NEWSPAPERS SELL THE MOST

Central America Perpetually Uneasy

BENQUE VIEJO DEL CARMEN, British Honduras — A Guatemalan soldier, rifle at his side, stands guard at the entrance to the little bridge leading into British Honduras which spans the 100-yard torrent of the Copan River here.

He and about 30 others at the small garrison on the Guatemalan side at this, the only frontier post between the two countries are all that British Hondurans ever see of the thousands of Guatemalan troops they believe are ready to invade this Central-American British Crown Colony on the Gulf of Mexico and incorporate it into Guatemala, under a 150-year-old territorial claim written into the Guatemalan Constitution.

"I think there will be a peaceful solution. The British have better guns than we do," an officer sunbathing on the lawn outside the garrison says.

But in spite of the fact that the Guatemalan army is becoming more preoccupied every week with fighting the increasingly active... leftist guerrillas in El Peten, the huge, undeveloped jungle province which borders British Honduras, the colony's 130,000 people still believe that there is a real danger of an invasion by "The Guats."

"They could take over this country in two days if they wanted," a resident of this Spanish-speaking border town said. "It would be like slapping a small child."

The latest crisis between Guatemala and British Honduras began when Britain flew in several hundred Grenadier guards in January for exercises and sent a task force of five warships, including the aircraft carrier Ark Royal, speeding towards the colony. Officially they were "on manoeuvers," but in fact, local opinion is convinced, they came as a show of strength to discourage a supposed Guatemalan military alert prompted by rumors that the colony's independence was imminent.

Guatemala's initial mild reaction turned to rage last month when she was told by Britain that the permanent British garrison in British Honduras would be doubled to some 550 men, and she publicly broke off four years of secret negotiations with Britain over the dispute.

So now there is deadlock again and the troops, which at present total about 650, are to stay indefinitely. They are building a small camp a few miles from the frontier which, it is expected, will eventually be occupied by some of the 250 troops of the colony's growing paramilitary force which is to be the country's post-independence army.

"The governor told me the troops would leave by the end of last month, but they are still here," says Mauricio Dubois, the anti-Communist colonel who has been Guatemalan consul in Belize city, the country's main town, for the past nine years. "We cannot resume talks until everything is as it was before the troops came in January."

The extension of the troops' stay is in line with the views of the governor, Richard Posnett, that there must be "a viable force" in the country to face the possibility of a Guatemalan attack. It appears to be the basis of the agreement which Premier George Price says he reached during his nine days of talks in London earlier this month on "the level of forces required for the adequate defense" of British Honduras "in the light of recent developments."

Price added that these recent events had "inevitably interferred with the timetable for independence," which everyone here takes to mean that the colony will not become independent this year, as the premier has repeatedly hinted that it would, on the assumption that he could get both a defense guarantee from Britain and an agreement with Guatemala.

"I don't think we'll get independence for five years now," says Harry Lawrence, former president of the Belize Chamber of Commerce and now editor of the country's principal newspaper, The Reporter.

Publicly, Guatemala is adamant about the colony not becoming independent before an agreement is reached. But in spite of last month's breakdown, the indications are that contacts are continuing between both sides in search of an agreement. "We are always ready to look for new solutions," Posnett says.

"What Guatemala wants," Posnett says, "are assurances that the country will not become another Chile, that it will not harbor guerrillas, and that it can have access to the sea. But the anti-British mood of Guatemalan public opinion which it has created is unfortunately an obstacle to a settlement for Guatemala."

Although the two countries do have educational and sporting exchanges and there is no problem in crossing the frontier, public opinion in British Honduras is fiercely hostile to Guatemala and in favor of the presence of British troops.

Opposition leader Philip Goldson led a pro-British demonstration of 7,500 people through the streets of Belize City last month, though they cautiously refused too accept a paid advertisement from him announcing the demonstration as one "welcoming" the arrival of British troops.

Even the radical United Black Association for Development was comforted by the sight of Royal Air Force jets screaming low over the city at the height of the January maneuvers.

Nudity Trend Grows On California Beach

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Nudes may not outnumber scuba divers and surfers on California's public beaches, but they definitely, ah, are beginning to be seen.

On warm weekends, hundreds show up at semi-secluded spots along the coast. They're generally ignored by authorities and, for that matter, by bathers in suits.

One such beach is Pirate's Cove, near Malibu, north of Los Angeles.

On a recent weekend, the crowd hit 1,000 at Pirate's Cove. Most of the bathers were nude. Men outnumbered women abut 2 to 1. There were many families, their children cavorting on the sparkling white sand and playing in the surf.

"If feels good to have the sun all over your body," observed a young man with shoulder-length blonde hair, lounging with a group of other nude youths. "You go up and talk to a chick and you're naked and she's naked, so you make nothing of it."

Nude sunbathing always has been popular in southern California but, until recently, usually in private.

Robert G. Johnston, head of the 20,000-member American Sunbathing Association, estimates at least 100,000 people attend nude get-togethers in southern California every weekend. Most are at backyard swimming pools.

007 Type From Army?

LONDON (Reuter) — The search for a new film James Bond has been switched to the British Army, where talent scouts are hoping to find a would-be 007 among the ranks.

A firm of film-casting agents has written to the headquarters of the army's elite parachute regiment, the Special Air Service, asking if they happen to have a Bond type available.

The agents believe an SAS type would be suitable, listing the following qualifications: minimum height, six-feet-two inches, age 28 or less, superb athlete, handsome, broad-shoulders and dominant personality.

Actor Sean Connery, who has starred as 007 in all but one of the Bond films has announced he definitely will not be making another.

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

Ambiguities in Fellowship

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

"Fellowship": that word has been given so much sticky frosting in church circles that we should be very careful when we use it (For some years now I have made it a personal rule not to attend any affair which is advertised as offering "food, fun, and fellowship," or something like that.)

Generally when church-epople call for "more fellowship" in their congregations they are simply asking for more churchy cosiness, for more opportunities for like-minded groups of nice people to come together for the coddling of their nice little pieties.

In the New Testament the word which is rendered in English as "fellowship" does, of course, carry the notion of friendliness within Christian communities and it does pertain to sharing and mutual support.

But in the New Testament the word is not limited to cosy ingrowness: it always pertains to outgoingness, it is always fellowship for evangelism and mission and compassionate service in the world.

A Christian congregation denies its New Testament foundation when it tries to become an ingrown fellowship, an exclusive club sort of thing. A Christian congregation as fellowship must be a task-force for outreaching Christian compassion.

Here we come hard up against one of the serious tensions in the life of many congregations today. When the chips are down — as they are for many congregations today — congregations tend to become terribly introspective and self-concerned. And we ministers often get caught in this, for we know that many of our people will judge our effectiveness primarily in terms of how well we maintain the congregation as an institution, as an ingrown fellowship.

The really successful pastor today, in the eyes of some church-members, is the one who is assiduous in paying them all kinds of attention and who brings in new members who will contribute to the budget and help get the congregation off the financial hook on which so many congregations are hung.

In my gloomier moments I sometimes feel that today a minister could get away with preaching obvious heresies and sonorous trivialities four Sundays out of five, providing he kept the money rolling in nicely. We parish ministers face terrible temptations today.

Christian fellowship must strengthen and deepen the faith of those who participate in it, and it is right that it affords them assurance and comfort. But it is not authentically Christian if it is not outgoing fellowship, if it is not fellowship for the sake of those outside it.

Church Library Body To Hold Workshop

The new Victoria Chapter, Congregational Libraries Association of British Columbia, is sponsoring a provincial workshop for all church librarians and members at Lansdowne College, University of Victoria, June 2 and 3.

The B.C. association was organized last November as an interdenominational agency to encourage the creation of church and congregational libraries. It seeks also to assist in training church people in library work, and it will emphasize the integral position of the library in religious education.

The association comes to B.C. — Victoria has the second chapter in the province — as an outgrowth of Pacific Northwest Association of Church Libraries of neighboring Washington State. Gordon New, Emmanuel Baptist Church, is the first Canadian on PNACL's executive council. New is vice-president of the British Columbia association.

The June workshop here will deal with promotion, circulation, buying policy, publishers, book processing, classification, cataloguing, book exchange and reviews. Willard Ireland, provincial archivist, will speak.

EVANGELIST SACKED

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Garner Ted Armstrong, 41, has been relieved of his duties as executive vice-president of the Worldwide Church of God and Ambassador College here, church and college officials have disclosed.

A statement released in the name of his father, Herbert W. Armstrong, 97, founder of both institutions, said the removal of the son involved "an internal disciplinary action by the church."

The younger Armstrong has been a commentator for the church and college over 300 radio stations and 65 television stations.

(He was heard six nights weekly at 10:30 p.m. on CJVI, Victoria.)

Neither Armstrong could be reached for comment on the statement, released by Deputy Chancellor David L. Antion and Acting Executive Vice-President Albert Portune, included the text of a letter which was read in February to some 250 congregations of the Worldwide Church of God.

The letter said the elder Armstrong had been increasingly worried over personal problems of his son. It recalled that the father had announced to the congregations last September that his son was going on a leave of absence.

The son was given permission to speak at church functions in various sections of the United States, the statement said, and then quoted the father as having said: "But after he had spoken at four of the sites I was forced to remove him from further speaking."

The younger Armstrong was last seen in public in the Pasadena area in January.

Ambassador College has three campuses. The Pasadena college has an enrolment of 700, the college at Big Sandy, Tex., 550, and one in England 150.

The church has a membership of about 75,000.

Secret's Finally Out . . . Interpol Just a Library

By JOHN VINOCUR

SAINT CLOUD, France (AP)—"Results of our gidad made Erkek Ying Ling show a deportee from Brazil where girof sent us re your odnub Nr. 2401 of March 27 has revealed ablov: . . ."

It sounds mysterious, but not really. In fact, not much more mysterious than the organization that transmitted the coded message—Interpol, the international police service, that sits out here on a bluff overlooking Paris, looking like a well-scrubbed soap factory.

Somehow, for all it slack of epague of circuitous activities, Interpol has a reputation as a supra-national police force with a staff of James Bonds and Hercule Poirots. It is not. Its basic job is transmitting messages and keeping archives for 114 countries, the kind of work that catches criminals but would put Agatha Christie to sleep.

★ ★ ★

The message above translates out as: "Results of our investigation made on subject named Ying Ling show him to be a deportee from Brazil from where information sent us in reference to your telegram No. 2401 of March 27, has revealed the following:"

Words like gidad, erkek and girof are used mainly to speed transmission by substituting two-syllable code words for multisyllabic words or phrases. The fact is, no one is likely to be listening on the transmissions because bribing a cop would come cheaper for organized crime than setting up an elaborate station to monitor Interpol.

★ ★ ★

Minus the eye-shades and galluses, the Interpol transmission room looks a bit like a 1920s railway dispatching centre: men in earphones alternately tapping at Morse keys and writing out Morse messages for retransmission. The staff handles 400 to 450 messages a day.

"It sounds a little corny, I know," one of the operators said, "but you get a kick when, say, Argentina reports back they've been able to make an arrest on a message you've handled from Belgium."

Most of the remainder of the staff of 120—it includes policemen on loan from Canada, Britain, the United States, Austria, West Germany, Ceylon and Chile—are divided into operational groups, specializing in an area of crime like narcotics or counterfeiting.

The narcotics group is headed by Raymond Kendall, a chief inspector from Scotland Yard. Its main job is culling the enormous Interpol files for information, pasting together bits and pieces of a criminal's activity in many countries for a line on whom he might be linked with and what his methods of operation are.

The archives take up a whole floor, one-half involving alphabetical listings and other phonetic files, where people are registered on the way someone heard a name pronounced.

The archives are not actually the best place to go for reassurance about your privacy. Take a certain Mrs. V. She died in a plane crash. No criminal, she, but there was an insurance investigation on the crash and her name was filed away. Interpol's version of immortality.

★ ★ ★

The one Interpol section that has slightly wider functions is a counterfeit-currency group which has a laboratory and makes expert determinations. The explanation for this is that many countries lack the expertise for analysis of foreign counterfeits but are reluctant to send the money to the country involved for fear it will be confiscated.

Interpol, 20 years old, runs on a yearly budget of about $1 million, paid on an assessment scale. Yugoslavia is the only Socialist country to hold membership, but there seems to be no reason the Soviet Union and its allies would be kept out if they ask to join. The organization steers clear of cases mixing police and politics.

★ ★ ★

Jean Nepote, a Frenchman who is Interpol's secretary general, spends a good deal of his time on para-diplomatic missions: coaxing less than fully co-operative members to pull their weight, reminding them about arrears, and suggesting that Interpol needs money to grow in order to keep up with the expansion of crime.

Ranger Creator Dies

GROSSE POINTE, Mich. (AP) — George W. Trendle, 87, creator of the Lone Ranger on radio nearly 40 years ago, died Wednesday in a Detroit hospital. He also created Sgt. Preston of the Yukon and the Green Hornet during the early days of radio.

TOP MALE VOICE CHOIR at recent B.C. Music Festival in Vancouver was Victoria's Arion. Conductor Bert Storar (left) shows the Joseph Williams Shield awarded the winning male choir and Kyrle Symons, choir president and a member for 43 years, holds the Burns Company Cup, awarded the community choir champions. This is the first time a Vancouver Island choir has taken the open championship class. (James McVie Photo).

Sask. Changes Cabinet Posts

REGINA (CP) — Three new members have been added to the Saskatchewan cabinet and there have been portfolio changes among the original 12 ministers, Premier Allan Blakeney announced Friday.

The new cabinet members are Elwood Cowley, MLA for Biggar; Alex Taylor, MLA for Kerrobert-Kindersley, and Ed Tchorzewski, MLA for Humboldt.

Cowley, 27, assumes the finance portfolio formerly held by Premier Blakeney; Taylor, 36, is the new minister of social services, taking over from Labor Minister Gordon Snyder, and Tchorzewski, 29, becomes provincial secretary, minister of the new department of culture and youth and minister of the new department of consumer affairs.

Attorney-General Roy Romanow formerly held the provincial secretary's post and also the youth agency, which now is part of the department of culture and youth.

The cabinet shuffle, the first for the New Democratic Party government since it took office last June, sees Ted Bowerman become the new minister of natural resources as well as the new minister of Northern Saskatchewan; Elling Kramer becomes the minister of highways, and Neil Byers becomes minister of the new department of the environment.

Hearings Set

EDMONTON (CP) — The Alberta legislature gave committee-of-the-whole approval Friday to plans for public hearings into a new oil revenue policy for the province.

The hearings, starting May 23, will run morning, afternoon and evening for four days. More than 50 groups have indicated intention of making presentations to the hearings on the government's proposed new oil reserve tax policy that would supersede the royalty base.

★ ★ ★

Grain Change

WINNIPEG (CP) — Agriculture Minister H. A. Olson said Friday the federal government is going ahead with a pilot project to test the feasibility of channelling grain through large interior terminal elevators.

First step will involve moving about 500,000 bushels through the government terminals at Saskatoon and Moose Jaw. The grain, predominantly barley, will be handled from country elevators within a 70-mile radius in trucks handling about 1,000 bushels a load.

★ ★ ★

Fees Dropped

EDMONTON (CP) — The Alberta government announced Friday that mentally ill and mentally retarded children will be cared for in provincial institutions without charge, effective June 1.

Health Minister Neil Crawford said the change will end "a longstanding injustice" in which parents of such children were charged from $2 a day in provincial institutions to $10 a day in private facilities. The new policy also involves private institutions.

★ ★ ★

Swan Case Heard

GRANDE PRAIRIE (CP) — The Energy Resources Conservation Board reserved judgment recently on a farmer's application to halt construction of a power transmission line which he says is endangering a group of rare trumpeter swans.

Oil Revenue Up

EDMONTON (CP) — The Alberta government reported Friday that revenue from petroleum and natural gas rights for the first quarter of 1972 totalled $73.9 million, an increase of more than $6.5 million from 1971.

While oil royalties increased by more than $6 million, sale of petroleum and natural gas exploration rights dropped by more than $2.8 million from the first quarter of 1971 to the first quarter of 1972.

★ ★ ★

Upgrading Urged

THOMPSON, Man. (CP) — Nicholas Dalgleish of Britain's Dalgleish Shipping Lines says the time has come to up-date facilities at Churchill in Northern Manitoba to avoid "possible disaster."

In an interview in Thompson, Dalgleish said the present loading gantries and other facilities at the port are as they were in the 1930s and a shipper with large freighters "just crosses his fingers and hopes."

Ducks Early

WINNIPEG (CP) — Ducks Unlimited (Canada) reports an unusual warm spell in mid-March lured migrating ducks to the Prairies at least 10 days ahead of schedule.

The main flight arrived in mid-April to mild weather and good water conditions, and an early hatch is in prospect if the weather remains favor-

SECOND SECTION

Move Over, Leacock

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

Yes, Virginia, there is another Canadian author besides Stephen Leacock.

And University of Victoria students are among the ever-increasing number of young Canadians who are finding that out for themselves.

UVic is becoming involved in a distinct trend sweeping the country which has seen a visible upsurge of interest in Canadian literature.

In September, the university's English department will offer two separate courses in Canadian literature — one to be divided into two sections — for students interested in the area.

And the department has hired two new professors, both specialists in Canadian literature, to join the teaching staff. The appointments are expected to be ratified by the board of governors Monday.

UVic's Canadian literature offerings can actually be considered an expansion, says Colin Partridge, an associate professor in the English department and director of American and Commonwealth Literature.

STUDENT DEMAND

Last year, his division had planned for only one section is each of the two courses offered and found that there were more students enrolled than could be handled.

So a second section was set up for the first of the two courses — a survey of Canadian literature — and the second section will stay this year.

If enrolment this year shows that two sections are not enough, a third will be added, Partridge said.

The expansion of Canadian literature studies has been accompanied by a corresponding drop in student interest in American literature.

The department has cut from two to one the number of sections in three separate courses in American literature, primarily because there weren't the numbers of student enrolment to support them.

But despite the cutbacks in the American offerings, Canadian literature is still not treated on an equal basis.

As it stands now, there are the two Canadian literature courses along with six American literature courses, 22 British-oriented courses, one combination course covering American and British and 17 others which do not fit into any of these categories.

UVic Responds To Growing Interest In Canadian Studies

However, English department head Roy Leslie is not overly worried that Canadian literature is being neglected at UVic.

TALL ORDER

Asked if the two courses are enough to cover the entire spectrum of Canadian literature, Leslie said, "That is always a tall order, but for the number of people who are likely to be taking it, yes, it should."

Leslie said the second of the two courses is more specialized and allows for students to study the subject in greater detail than the survey course.

One of the men teaching Canadian literature at UVic this past year was Robert McDougall, a visiting professor from Carleton University. When McDougall returns to Carleton this summer, he will be engaged in an effort to develp the Canadian studies program there, which embraces other disciplines besides literature, into a more extensive training ground for university professors interested in Canada.

McDougall said there is no Canadian institution which concentrates on producing scholars in Canadian studies or literature.

As a result, with the increased demand by Canadian universities for specialists in Canadian studies, there is an insufficient supply.

He said that besides UVic, Simon Fraser University and the University of B.C. were also looking this year for professors to teach courses in Canadian studies, specifically Canadian literature.

McDougall said there has been a real crusade waged over the past decade or so to get Canadian literature accepted in the universities. He said the opposing argument has been that there is only one literature and that is English literature.

PAPERBACKS HELP

"But that argument just doesn't stand up anymore," he said, "and most of the pressure for new courses has been coming from students."

Partridge, Leslie and McDougall agree that one of the most important factors which has led to the acceptance and popularity of Canadian literature is the availability of paperback editions of novels, poems and plays by Canadian authors.

Several Canadian publishing firms have established extensive interests in supplying universities with paperback editions, which makes it much easier for the university professor and his class to obtain the needed books.

As for the reasons why Canadian literature has become popular lately, Robert Lawrence, another English professor at UVic, has some theories of his own.

Lawrence has been teaching Canadian literature at UVic since the university began offering it about eight years ago.

He feels more students are now interested in Canadian literature because they are becoming more aware of it at an earlier age. Canadian literature is taught much more in public high school now than ever before and students are becoming familiar with the names of authors and Canadian literature themes.

For another thing, Lawrence says, Canadians are becoming more aware of their Canadian identity, through what they read, hear watch and talk about.

CANADIAN IDENTITY

Also with Canadian youth so much more on the move these days, hitch-hiking across the country and getting the feel of the land, they are able to identify with the Canadianism contained in the literature of our own authors.

If interest is sustained over the next few years, Canadian studies will likely offer even more specialized courses, perhaps including separate courses on Canadian fiction and Canadian poetry.

Partridge's vision is of course, a set of courses, which would lump Canadian literature in with literature of other new and developing countries.

"Canadians, as members of a new country, could learn a great deal from other new countries," Partridge said. "And this area of studies is something that has just not been done."

He suggested that Canadians could learn a lot from looking at the development of Australia and New Zealand and some of the Latin American countries.

Stephen Leacock, may he rest in peace, would be pleased at the implications.

TRUCKER CRUSHED TO DEATH

A 25-year-old Victoria trucker died instantly about 10 p.m. Friday when a truck-trailer unit backed over him on the Canadian Pacific truck lot at Swartz Bay.

The dead man, Paul M. Berard of Apt. 501, 707 Esquimalt Road, had been an employee of Capital Freightways for six years.

A coroner's inquest has been ordered.

Sidney RCMP said the driver of the truck was Ronald Vanzetta, 7129 East Saanich Road, Saanichton, an employee of McIlwaine Van and Storage.

Capital Freightways manager Tom Der said today there were no witnesses to the accident because it happened in a poorly-lighted area of the yard.

Youngster Dies In House Blaze

A four-year-old Saanich girl died early today, trapped in a rear bedroom as fire ravaged her Stevens Road home.

The victim, Christine Anne Westdorp, died after her mother, Mrs. Arthur Westdorp, carried her six-year-old sister Heidi to safety and attempted to return through the flames to save Christine.

The fire of unknown origin broke out in the home at 303 Stevens Road about 1:30 a.m. Mrs. Westdorp and the two children were alone in the house at the time.

DRIVEN BACK

The father, a desk editor at the Daily Colonist, was at work when the blaze occurred.

Mrs. Westdorp apparently after carrying six-year-old Heidi to safety tried to return through the flames to get Christine, was driven back and then attempted to rescue the child by putting a ladder from outside the house to the window of the bedroom.

Saanich Fire Department, which received the call at 1:34 a.m., attended with several units, but much of the house was destroyed.

Inspector Harry Adams of Saanich police said today the three-bedroom home was badly damaged, with what escaped the fire itself suffering extreme smoke and water damage.

He said Saanich police responded to the call with seven officers but neither police nor firemen were able to rescue the girl. The exact cause of death is not yet known, he said.

Coroner Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre was advised of the death today, but no decision on an inquest had been announced by early afternoon.

Police and fire department officials were still on the scene today, and investigation into the cause of the blaze still in progress.

Sands Mortuary is in charge of funeral arrangements, but no details have been announced.

The Westdorp family only recently moved here from the Prairies.

Canada Discovered by Radio

By BRYAN McGILL
Times Staff

He's taken on and left more jobs across the country than any dozen people would in their lifetime, and he's talked to all the Important People of Canada on all the Important Things.

But Peter Gzowski only began to discover what Canada is about last October.

His awakening has come through "the most exciting medium in Canada" — radio, expressly CBC radio, Gzowski explained in talking about his highly successful program This Country in the Morning.

"I have never learned as much about this country. There's incredible people all over the place," he said in an interview Friday at the Empress.

Gzowski, 37, has a career that has spanned nearly 20 years, which includes operating a bulldozer, working for a host of small and large newspapers, being a host on a television talk show, being a controversial editor of Maclean's magazine, and free-lancing in between.

"I have alway done what I wanted to do . . . but I'm happier with radio as a medium."

SMART PEOPLE

He said he always knew "people are so smart," and this has been dramatically borne out when 150,000 of them tune into his program three hours a day, five days a week.

"I sort of rap with them, and I experience a great sense of community. I feel I know all these people."

As an example of how radio can involve people, Gzowski wrote the first line of a lyric, and invited listeners to take it up from there.

"Guess how many people sat down and wrote lyrics? Some 1,500!"

And when asking earlier this year whether anybody could see a sign of spring, he got responses from across the country like "it's spring because today I took off my long underwear" or "although it's 40below this morning, for the first time the sun has landed on the kitchen table."

GZOWSKI
. . . incredible people all over the place

"This is folk poetry," Gzowski said. "It's much more important than politics."

CBC UNIQUE

He said CBC is uniquely Canadian.

"What do you measure CBC against? There's nothing like it in the world."

He said that although Canadian newspapers are generally better and more responsible than American ones, they still look the same and do the same things.

Canadian television models itself on American, and Canadian musicians, as good as they are, are still measured against standards south of the border.

He said newspapers are operating 10 years in the past, because they still cover speeches and get their news from automatic places like police and fire stations.

"Nothing is happening in newspapers. It's a medium that doesn't affect or involve anybody. People desperately need a voice and I don't think they can be heard in newspapers."

Gzowski was somewhat reluctant in talking about Canada's politics, but he noted that Quebec students and workers are getting together, the first time this has happened in Canada, and the ingredients of what elsewhere has always been an effective radical left.

"I don't pretend to understand Quebec. I don't understand Ontario."

Gzowski expressed admiration for Liberal maverick, David Anderson, member of parliament for Esquimalt-Saanich.

He said Anderson's real strength isn't that he's fighting against oil tankers coming through B.C. waters but that "he stands up for the rights of B.C. against the establishment in the East."

With all of Canada's divisions and frictions, Gzowski said there is no other place in the world he'd rather be.

"There's hope here that we can solve the problems that are crushing and have crushed other nations."

'Desperate Need' at EMI

Child psychiatrist Phillip Ney said Friday there is a "desperate need" for the long-delayed children's unit at the Eric Martin Institute.

He blamed the provincial government for lack of progress in getting the 10-bed unit operational since he was named its clinical director almost four months ago.

"The only thing I can do now when there's a desperate situation is to admit the kids and put them on the adult floors," said Ney.

"It's a very unsatisfactory arrangement but I have to do it and at this point it's all because the B.C. Hospital Insurance Service will not approve the (operating) budget and let me get on with the job."

IMPAIRED TREATMENT

Ney said mixing adult and child patients in the psychiatric hospital raises real problems and impairs treatment of the children.

A proposed operating budget for the children's unit was forwarded by Royal Jubilee Hospital to BCHIS, the provincial agency which administers hospitals in B.C., several months ago.

A spokesman for BCHIS said today the unit's operating budget would be considered by the service's rates board Monday and the hospital would get the board's view shortly after.

The children's unit at EMI will be the second in B.C., the other being at Vancouver General Hospital. It has been planned for the institute since it opened almost 2½ years ago and the sixth floor where it will be located has been vacant since the opening.

EXPANSION PLANNED

The long-range plan is to ultimately expand the unit from 10 to 20 beds. Any development was delayed until early this year in a dispute between Health Minister Ralph Loffmark and the hospital and doctors over staffing.

The former wanted a clinical director to design and oversee the treatment program. Loffmark argued the unit could have a clinical director or doctors treating patients on a fee-for-service basis but not both.

In a compromise settlement announced in January, doctors will be allowed to treat their own patients in the unit. Ney's job as clinical director is expected to take about half his time.

Boy's Deed Gives Wonderful Feeling

A 12-year-old boy has given "a wonderful feeling" — $1,157's worth — to a local businessman.

The boy is Robert Godfrey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Godfrey, 1750 Haultain.

The Man is Les Pelvey, owner of Oak Bay Marine Sales and Service.

A week ago Friday, Robert was on his way to a baseball practice in Allenby Park. He saw an unlocked bank bag at the side of the road.

Turned in at the Saanich police station, the bag was found to hold a deposit slip and $1,175 in cash.

Pelvey says he was "very, very surprised" to have the money returned to him the next day.

"In these days it gives you a wonderful feeling when something like this happens," he said.

In turn for the "wonderful feeling", Pelvey said he intends to send Robert written thanks and something a little more tangible.

Family Service Loses Community Chest Support

The Community Chest of Greater Victoria has decided to withdraw its $82,000 annual contribution to Family and Children's Service.

Notification of the decision by the Chest's board of directors was sent to FCS president Walter Cownden in a letter Thursday.

The decision means that after this year's commitment, the Community Chest will no longer contribute to FCS's financing.

Chest president W. H. Armstrong said this will enable the Chest to better meet the needs of other agencies participating in the Chest or even those who are not members of the United Appeal.

Cownden said the decision to drop FCS support will weaken the Chest's appeal to the public.

Cownden also said he realizes that the Chest has run into a number of problems because of the failure of recent years' drives to reach their goals, but said droppping FCS will remove one of the areas where it has been easy for people to relate to children and families in distress, "a real plus for the Chest in obtaining contributions."

Although the $82,000 is only a small part of the Chest's $2.35 million budget, Cownden said, it is still a substantial amount and may lead to cutbacks in service by FCS.

He said he would not like to see support for the agency come exclusively from the provincial government and said the agency's board may have to consider some kind of independent appeal.

Reasons cited by Armstrong for discontinuing the grant included the Chest's belief that financing for FCS was provided for by stature, and that it is no longer appropriate to use voluntary funds for the purpose.

The number of agencies to share the United Appeal's proceeds this year is now 22. This year's target amount will be set after budgets from the different agencies are considered in June.

Ask the Times

Q. In 1906 the Boston Globe had an article regarding the largest sailing vessels in the world, one being the six-masted schooner, Thomas W. Lawson. What was the type and rig of the other? R.L.

A. The Thomas W. Lawson was not a six-masted schooner, she was the only seven-masted schooner ever to be built. She was not the largest sailing vessel, either, but the largest schooner. Built in 1902, she was 388 feet long. The largest ship up to that time was the German-built Preussen, the only full-rigged five-masted ship to be built. She was 407.3 feet in length. The largest sailing vessel in history was the steel-hulled, five-masted barque France II, built in Bordeaux in 1911. She was 418.8 feet in length.

The France II, however, also had auxiliary power, being fitted with two steam engines.

Although she was smaller, the Thomas W. Lawson had a huge loading capacity because of her beam, having a loading capacity of 8,100 tons, compared to the Preussen's 8,000 tons.

Q. What is the quickest and most efficient method of hulling large quantities of sunflower seeds? G.F.

A. Apparently, there is no really quick method — other than a special machine which is unrealistically expensive for most people. The operator of a local health food store said there's no other way than doing it laboriously by hand.

Too Many Cooks in Learning's Kitchen

IT INTERESTS ME TO note that after months of playing boule-roulant with one of education's most durable chestnuts, a citizen's committee has reported itself of divided mind about corporal punishment in the schools.

This inability to agree is not surprising. It's the result that a school board can expect when it turns a bunch of amatuer cooks loose in education's kitchen.

Also, one ingredient essential to an informed decision was missing.

Any group that undertakes to sort out the pros and cons of strapping needs something more tangible than a sampling of community opinion on which to base its judgment.

Before the committee began it's deliberations, each member should have been strapped.

It's probable that some of those members got the strap at least once in their student years. If they were real little hellers, they may have been requested to extend the hand palm-up any number of times.

Still, a refresher course would have been in order. I hope that when next a school board mounts a committee on corporal punishment, it will insist that those who serve on it back the theory with experience.

To be effective, the subject should have sampled various alternatives to a paw-tingling before he is strapped.

He should first be counselled, exiled from the classroom for brief periods, kept after school, and sent down the hall for a session with a principal who doesn't know what the hell to do about him either.

His murky little psyche should be probed, his eyesight, hearing and capacity for learning investigated.

If our committee member's parents are still topside, they should be consulted for clues that might explain his anti-social behavior pattern.

Lastly our subject should be dealt three stingers on each hand, preferably by a teacher who wishes to God that the board had chosen to turn a committee loose on a matter of genuine concern.

Like parental responsibility.

Or the California influence on British Columbia education.

Or how many students can be crammed into a classroom before education becomes a sorry farce.

With such thoughts in mind, even a teacher who employs the strap rarely if at all might be tempted to administer a couple of extra licks!

B.C. Tel, to who my compliments on its always effective and often superlative TV commercials, would have us subscribers say hello to an old friend. This is the upright telephone with cylindical shaft and pestle-shaped receiver.

Like others who toiled in the newsrooms of the past, I have sentimental recollections of the so-called candlestick phone. It lent a glamor that the squatty black instrument on my desk can't supply, and its receiver was more than merely a thing of beauty.

It was functional. Whether by accident or design, it fitted perfectly between ear and lean shoulder, thereby freeing the hands for other purposes.

We've even thought of having one of the new-old uprights installed at home, but the prospect of a $10 changeover fee and an additional $1.95 monthly rental exercises a cooling effect.

Sentiment's dandy, and there are days when even an optimist may be inclined to regard this discordant present as a wrong number. Even so, we'll stick with black-and-squatty, even though its receiver doesn't fit this plumper shoulder.

Trapp Has 'Bon Voyage' Target

IN TIMES GOLF FINAL

VAUGHAN TRAPP
. . . leaves next week

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

It's no great secret. Vaughan Trapp would like to move along in a blaze of glory, and that means success over Al Zimmerman in Sunday's playoff for the Times Vancouver Island Open golf championship.

The 36-hole playoff at Royal Colwood, starting at 9:15 a.m. and 1:15 p.m., will be Trapp's last official act as a Victoria-based player. He gives up his assistant's post at Victoria Golf Club to move to Vancouver next week and a new assignment with an indoor golf school.

"I'd like to have people say 'remember how Vaugh used to play' rather than 'remember that guy who used to work here?'," Trapp said Friday.

If that is his wish, he has to overcome "only" a difficult course and an experienced campaigner.

But there is a suspicion that neither Colwood nor Zimmerman plan to blow easily to Trapp's bon voyage demands.

The suspicion's are Trapp's.

Zimmerman is 63, Trapp 28. Some suspect the 35-year age spread will weigh heavily in Vaughan's favor over the 36-hole march Sunday.

Trapp doesn't believe it.

Nor does he believe that he will enjoy a great hitting advantage over the long (6,539 yards) Colwood course.

"I could come up with an edge," suggests Trapp, "if I follow Al down the centre of the fairways."

It is essential that accuracy accompany distance in order to score well at Colwood. Trapp undoubtedly will have the edge off the tees, but he is the first to concede the accuracy advantage to Zimmerman, the former tour professional who retired to North Saanich a few years ago and now plays at Glen Meadows.

"We've played the qualifying and four match-play rounds to get to Colwood," Trapp said. "Al hasn't missed a fairway. I did hear he missed one . . . back in 1943 or '44. . . ."

Zimmerman's accuracy and great finesse going into and on the greens has marked the veteran's march into the final. Al did leave his stamina open to some doubt last week because he needed to play only 30 holes in order to defeat Cedar Hill amateur Gordie Rands, 7 and 6, in the semi-finals at Oak Bay.

Trapp, a two-time winner of the Times Trophy, staged an arrousing, last-hole victory over defending champion Bill Wakeham to complete the setting for Sunday's all-pro playoff.

Last week's semi-finals stirred great interest in Sunday's playoff and fans are reminded that no admission is charged. It's for free.

The Trapp - Zimmerman match is the main event, but not to be overlooked is a handicap division playoff for the Hugh Francis Trophy between Gorge Vale clubmates Alastair Fulton and Bill Burrows.

Fulton, an eight handicapper, will give away one stroke to his southpaw-swinging rival.

The handicap final leads the way off the first tee with rounds at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m.

If 2½ Players Drafted, Cougars Will Be Smiling

Recently at the Victoria press club, the Imperial Inn division, Eric Bishop was reciting from some of his personal experiences of running a junior hockey club for two straight seasons.

Some of the stuff was exclusive, and even too good to use. But Eric did take time to say of the Cougars, the club he controls as general manager in the Western Canada Junior League:

"Heavens, No! We didn't lose a bundle."

To the special guests who were offering him their ears, he said that acually, if the club was fortunate, it could break even financially on the year. It all depends on what happens in the National Hockey League draft.

This is a device which can make or break junior hockey clubs. Because whenever a draftable junior is picked up by an NHL club, his previous clubs share in his glory. They get straight cash, which is broken down on a pre-set scale to all clubs on which he has performed.

Then, if that player stays around training camp in the NHL, and is good enough to get in 24 NHL games. A Bonanza! The club from which he graduated is rewarded again.

In simple terms, if the Cougars could have two, or perhaps two and one-half players drafted, the club could realize up to $15,000, and last season suddenly would turn out to be a reasonably successful one.

This doesn't bring into account the cost of the original WCJHL franchise. "You don't do that," Eric suggested. In actual people, the break-even point works out to another 300 or 400 fans a game.

Kennett, Donaldson 'Possibles'

But back to those two and one-half Cougars. There are such things as half players, you know. Take Dave Maynard for example. A goalkeeper, he finished out the season in Winnipeg. Now, if it so happens that Maynard is considered good enough to get a look-see in the NHL, then, under terms of his switch to Winnipeg, the Cougars stand to gain in cold cash. This makes sense, because the Cougars at one time this year had two goalies of almost equal stature.

Don't take this reporter's word for it. Rudy Pilous of the Brandon Wheat Kings made the observation and other observers since have backed him up. And the fellow who remained when Maynard left was Darryl Fedorak. And he is considered very draftable, too.

"He played well for us," said Bishop, "and he really didn't have too much up front at times, either." The implication here is that Fedorak may be better than his record rates him. But that's what NHL scouts are for; and he was scouted, several times.

Two others with a good chance? Gary Donaldson and Murray Kennett. If Donaldson is on the small side, he can still play well, is quick, and is capable of giving it a good try. Besides, he's no smaller than some of those who were drafted last year, and just as gutsy too.

Kennett could be a surprise pick. To hear hockey people tell it, he's an enigma with a question mark behind his name. He appears to have the potential, but somehow his full talents haven't blossomed, so nobody is really certain how good he might be.

No Decision on Cats' New Coach

Of course, this could be said of anyone. But just to make certain that important people get the idea he wants to better himself, Kennett has made a move that may pay off.

He has taken the course of "power skating" under figure-skating coach Ron Vincent of the Racquet Club. Kennett was not going to sit idly by when initiative and hard work may help to get him a bigger pay cheque or an NHL contract.

Otherwise, the Cougars haven't decided on a coach for next year. "We've thought about it," said Bishop "but no decision. Most people are under contract right now anyway."

Fred Hucul, it will be recalled, jilted the team in January, and managing director Mitch Pechet took over for the balance of the season.

Will Pechet be back?

That, too, is undecided, or not about to be announced.

But neither is it known what direction the NHL will take this year when the current agreement with the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association runs out.

Will it be renewed? Will club sponsorship return. Will the World Hockey Association adopt a draft agreement similar to the NHL? Will it sponsor junior clubs?

Finally, No! The club isn't up for sale, not really, unless of course an offer is made which would be too good to turn down, and that hasn't been the case. But that comes under the general heading of: "Hell, anything is for sale, if the price is right." But right now that is not so with the Cougars. And if any directors wish to dispose of their stock, that possibility is provided for within the corporate structure of the club.

"That's business. Ours."

Barrie Win Knots Final

KIMBERLEY — Barrie Flyers led all the way to take a 4-1 victory over Spokane Jets Friday night, knotting the best-of-seve Allan Cup Final for the Canadian senior amateur hockey championship at two games apiece.

It was the second straight win for the Flyers, who took a 4-2 decision Tuesday at Spokane after the Jets had chalked up 3-0 and 8-3 victories in the first two games.

Fifth game is scheduled here tonight.

It's Mt. Doug Again, With Class and Power

By JACK KEATING
Times Staff

In a classic sort of way, Jim Thorne epitomized the power of Mt. Douglas in the 26th annual Victoria senior high school track and field meet Friday at Centennial Stadium.

Thorne is a long-distance runner who specializes in the gruelling 3,000 metres.

While several of his rivals gasped for air and an Oak Bay runner lay sprawled from exhaustion, the 18-year-old Mt. Doug senior calmly slipped off his shoes and socks and began a light jog around Centennial Stadium.

Moments earlier, he seemed to get stronger as the just-under two-mile event entered the final leg and he pulled away from Oak Bay's Richard Kirkham.

MISSES RECORD

His winning time of 8:48.1 minutes was just three seconds shy of the record he set last year.

Thorne showed both class and power. That's been the trademark of the Mt. Doug track program for five straight years.

The Rams won the Victoria meet and the Roy Jones Memorial Trophy Friday afternoon for the fifth straight time with another display of class and power.

Entering the largest number of finalists (69), Mt. Doug compiled an impressive 510½ points to finish ahead of Oak Bay (420½) and Claremont (417½) in an eight-school fight. Claremont captured the Hocking and Forbes Trophy as boys' aggregate champions while Mt. Doug won the girls' team title.

STRONG IN RELAYS

Four winning relay teams and the superlative efforts of Cathy Sapsford and Brad Yakubowich padded the road to victory for coach Stan Gill's Mt. Doug charges.

Miss Sapsford and Yakubowich captured trophies as the outstanding female performer and the sprint champion, respectively.

Run off under almost-ideal conditions, there were the usual heart-thumping finishes and an impressive run on records. A total of 15 records were broken and two were equalled during the hectic day.

Oak Bay's Al Weicker broke brother Dave's record in the 800 metres and outlasted Kirkham in the 1500-metres for a double victory to earn acclaim as the boys' outstanding performer for the second straight year.

Weicker was well short of a 19-year-old record he broke in the 1500 metres last year, and finished third in the 400 behind Grant Boland of Oak Bay and Tim Lott of Claremont.

Both finished in 51 flat.

He eclipsed the 1500 mark earlier in the eliminations but entering in three events and a relay may have thwarted his chances of breaking some more marks.

"This hot weather takes a lot out of you," said Weicker between races. "I was pretty socked."

Miss Sapsford matched Penny May's record in the 200-metres (25.7) and set a new mark in the 400-metres (57.8).

Yakubowich, touted as the finest prep sprinter in B.C., dashed to first place in the 100 (11.1) and 200-metres (22.6).

Double winner Jill Pelland of Oak Bay tied Miss May's mark in the 80-metre hurdles (11.5) and then won the 100-metres in 12.6 — three seconds faster than her nearest competitors.

Little Ronnie Hind of Mt. Doug won the long and high jumps. She went over the bar in 5'3½" for a new high jump record.

Three other "A" flight records were broken by Claremont finalists.

George Brandstetter completed the 1,500 steeplechase in 4:40.0 and Ben Elwell hurled the discus 126'4½".

The most exciting event of the day saw Lott overtake Yakubowich in the stretch to lead Claremont's 4x400 metre relay team to a record smashing victory in the 60th and final event.

Fish, Beer, Rabbits, Squirrels and Snakes

FORT WORTH, Tex. (AP) — A fishing role, a beer can and a deck of cards served as the instruments of preparation in Jerry Heard's tune-up for the $125,000 Colonial National Invitation golf tournament.

Dave Stockton prepared himself with a California hunt for rabbits, squirrels and snakes.

Their methods, however unorthodox, reaped dividends. They shared a one-shot lead today going into the third round of the tournament, five under par on the treacherous par-70 Trinity River layout.

"I hadn't played in five or six days and I really didn't know how I was going to do here," said Heard, who turned 25 during his unusual preparation for the tournament.

"All I did was fish, drink beer and play cards—I just fiddled."

Armed with a .22 calibre pistol, Stockton said he pursued his quarry through the hills of northern California, but admitted: "I'm not a real threat to them anyway . . . I couldn't hit the side of the barn."

Heard tacked a four-under-par 66 onto an opening-round 69 while Stockton strung a 68 to a 67 for the 135 total and a stroke edge over Fred Marti and Lee Elder.

SHARE SECOND

Marti, co-leader, with Bruce Crampton at the end of 18 holes, matched par after an opening 66 and shared second with Elder, who floundered in a trap at the final hole, wound up with a 67 and then confessed:

"My wife told me if I didn't win some money she was going to take me off the tour and get me a job."

Bates Aim for Top

Looking at a man whose name sounds like "yawn" won't be a ho-hum matter for Victoria Bates this weekend.

Making their home-park debut in the Northwest International Fastball League, the Victorians will tangle with Seattle Pay 'n' Pak in a four-game series at Royal Athletic Park.

Bidding to snap a first-place deadlock with the Seattle slickers, Bates batters expect to see a lot of pitcher Dick Yohn, of the men who threaten to make the Pay-Pak crew the toughest in the circuit.

Combining with veteran Chris Christianson to form Seattle's one-two pitching punch, Yohn collected two victories last weekend as Pay-Pak, Washington regional champion last year, started the campaign by taking three of four games against Blaine Pastimes.

Bates also got away to a flying start as they displayed considerable hitting power. With husky Harvey Stevenson blasting three home runs, the Victorians came out on top in three of four contests against Auburn Ruth Realty at Tacoma.

That set the stage for Bates and Pay-Pak to be tied for first place as they start this weekend's series. Games at Athletic Park are scheduled for 7 and 9 p.m. tonight and for 1 and 3 p.m. Sunday.

In league action Friday, Blaine scored a pair of victories over Tacoma, 7-3 and 4-1.

Earlier in the week, Blaine split a doubleheader with Vancouver Canadians, winning the second game 3-2 after Canadians took the opener 2-1.

Last-Inning Blow Ruins No-Hit Bid

Strong pitching by Jack Lundquist Friday carried Juan de Fuca Sports to a share of first place in the Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League.

Lundquist, in command all the way, missed a bid for a no-hitter with two out in the final inning as Juan de Fuca blanked Labatts 2-0. Labatts' catcher Cec Ferguson was the Lundquist, who walked one in the seventh frame.

Lundquist, who walked on batter, got offensive support from Ron Griffis, who connected for a fourth-inning home run and later scored the second Juan de Fuca run after tripling in the sixth.

At Sooke, the host Merchants shaded Six-Mile House 5-4 by rallying for two runs in the bottom of the sixth inning. Pete Songhurst and Larry Grunow each banged in two runs for the winners.

ROYALS TO FACE PETES IN FINAL

OTTAWA (CP) — Cornwall Royals and Peterborough Petes play Sunday night in a sudden-death game for the Memorial Cup. It's the first time either city has gone this far in the running for the Canadian junior hockey championship.

Royals made their way into the final Friday night in convincing fashion, blanking Edmonton Oil Kings 5-0 before 8,408 fans. From the noise in the Civic Centre, most of them were Royal supporters.

Petes earned their place into the final earlier in the first-ever round-robin series in the junior category put on by the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association. Peterborough dumped the Royals 4-2 Monday and beat the Oil Kings 6-4 Wednesday.

Canada's Chances In Doubles Bleak

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mike Belkin, playing captain of Canada's Davis Cup tennis team, said after the first day of play Friday in the North American Davis Cup challenge round against Mexico that the departure of Peter Burwash from the team may cost Canada a chance to win.

Burwash, the 26-year-old Brockville, Ont., player, quit the Canadian team in a huff Wednesday after being informed he wasn't playing the singles matches.

Instead, Belkin chose Tony Bardsley, 27, of Vancouver, as the singles player, along with himself.

If the script is the same as last year's, in which Mexico took a 3-2 victory in the best-of-five series, Burwash's flight may mean defeat.

It all hinges on the doubles competition, which gets under way today at 2 p.m. EDT.

"I haven't played with either Tony or Dale Power, our other team member," Belkin said, "so it's going to be tough to beat the Mexicans, who are good in doubles.

HAS NO REGRETS

"I had played with Peter before, and if the two of us had played, we might have had a pretty good chance. Now I'd have to say we're going to have to be lucky."

Belkin said he still didn't regret the decision to choose Bardsley, despite the Vancouver player's loss in straight sets to Raul Ramirez in the second of Friday's two singles matches.

Bardsley lost 4-6, 6-8, 2-6 to Ramirez, the 18-year-old Mexican.

Belkin took the opening singles by hanging on to defeat Joaquin Loyo Mayo 6-2, 6-0, 3-6, 6-8, 7-5.

"Let's face it, we're in a lot of trouble," the 26-year-old Belkin said.

"I'm pretty damn mad at Peter and I certainly hope something is done.

"I'm tired now and I don't know if I can last out the three days. It's going to be very tough."

Last year, Belkin's two victories in the singles were all Canada could manage.

WINNER MEETS U.S.

If Canada loses the doubles, the outcome of the round would depend on whether Belkin and Bardsley can come through to defeat Ramirez and Loyo Mayo in Sunday's singles. Winner of the round will face the defending Davis Cup champion United States' team.

INDIVIDUAL winner in third annual B.C. intercollegiate golf championship was Victoria's Dave Mick (above), who carded three-under-par 212 for 54 holes in tournament that wound up Friday at Beach Grove. UVic team finished third, behind winning Washington and runnerup Portland State. Mick finished three strokes ahead of Washington's Gary Sater. Other UVic scorers included Gordie Rands (224), Keith Burrell (235), Frank Bayuk (244), Ken Morgan (245) and Steve Hambleton (257).

Yogi Plays Percentages Instead of Willie Mays

By The Associated Press

"We want Willie! We want Willie! We want Willie . . ." the fans chanted.

Willie Mays was making his debut Friday night in a New York Met uniform. But No. 24 never got the chance to show his stuff against his former team, San Francisco Giants, much to the dismay of the 44,271 fans who jammed Shea Stadium hoping to get a glimpse of their newest hero.

It would have been perfect for baseball's top right-handed home-run hitter to step up to the plate and crash his 647th over the wall.

The only problem, though, was that when a pinch-hitter was needed, a right-handed pitcher was on the mound for the Giants.

And so, with one on in the eighth inning, the Mets trailing 1-0 and the fans hollering for Willie, Mets' manager Yogi Berra stayed with the percentages and sent up John Milner, a rookie and, more important, a southpaw swinger.

BOOS TURN TO CHEERS

The fans booed, but the jeers turned to cheers as Milner worked Steve Stone for a walk and later came home with the tying run on Ken Boswell's double that knocked out the San Francisco starter.

The cheers continued in the ninth as the Mets loaded the bases with one out against reliver Jerry Johnson and Jerry Grote singled up the middle to give the Mets a 2-1 victory.

In Friday night's other National League games, Los Angeles Dodgers defeated Philadelphia Phillies 6-1, San Diego Padres beat Montreal Expos 5-3, Pittsburgh Pirates topped Houston Astros 4-2, Chicago Cubs blanked Atlanta Braves 2-0 and Cincinnati Reds edged St. Louis Cardinals 5-4.

"I felt sorry for the kid," Mays said of Milner, who had to face the wrath of the crowd. "But it didn't seem to bother him. And Yogi probably did the best thing by letting the kid bat."

Berra stuck by his strategy, one he'll probably stick with the rest of the season.

"If it's a left-handed pitcher, I use him," Yogi said with a nod toward Willie. "I don't let the crowd make decisions for me."

SUTTON UNBEATEN

Unbeaten Don Sutton finally gave up a run—he'd gone 31 scoreless innings—but couldn't have cared less.

"As long as we had five more than they did, I wasn't worried about that run," said the Dodger ace, who chalked up his fifth victory with a four-hitter against the Phillies.

HITTING PROBLEMS

In the American League, Baltimore Orioles and Oakland pitcher Denny McLain have a hitting problem. The problem is that the Orioles arent hitting anybody and everybody's hitting Denny.

The Orioles did manage six hits Friday, which matched the total of their two previous games, but bowed to Chicago White Sox and Wilbur Wood 4-3.

The Athletics got McLain off the hook after the former super-star was rapped for four runs in the second inning by Boston, including home runs on Rick Miller and Tommy Harper, but lost 7-6 on Harper's second home run of the game in the 12th inning.

Elsewhere in the American, Minnesota Twins and Milwaukee Brewers battled 21 innings — one short of the longest night games in AL history — before play was suspended with a 3-3 tie to be resumed before today's regularly-scheduled game, Texas Rangers downed Cleveland Indians 3-1, and New York Yankees whipped California Angels 6-3. Detroit Tigers and Kansas City Royals were rained out.

Canadian Near Lead

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Gloria Ehret, seeking her first victory in six years, shot a five-under-par 67 for a one-stroke lead after the first round of the $42,000 Suzuki Ladies Golf Internationale.

The 30-year-old blonde from Dallas needed only 29 putts for her 33-34 round on the sun-splashed Brookside Country Club course.

Jocelyne Bourassa, of Montreal, and Jane Blalock of Cape Cod, Mass., had 68s for second place in the 54-hole tournament. Sandra Palmer of Palm Springs, Calif., was another shot back at 69.

Driving Leads Expanded As Pursuers Penalized

Regular Saturday racing begins tonight at Western Speedway with the two driving leaders suddenly holding expanded point margins.

Runner-up pilots in both division — stock cars and super-stocks — were victims this week as the technical committee of the Vancouver Island Track Racing Association handed out stiff penalties for rules violations.

Terry Forsyth, running behind leader Bill Price in super-stock standings, lost all points earned this year because of an illegal rear-end assembly in his car.

Forysth says that because of the ruling he will now run his machine only in open races.

Richard Cubby was shunted from second to 11th place in the stock-car section when he lost 115 points for running too many shocks on April 30.

Larry Lepard (179 points) is now second behind front-running Tony Johnson (313) on the stock-car list and Roy Haslam (183) has moved into second place among super-stock drivers, well back of Bill Price, who has collected three successive main-event victories and a whopping total of 375 points.

The struggles to catch Price and Johnson continue at the speedway tonight with time trials beginning at 7 and racing slated to start at 8.

JACKSON CUP FINAL SUNDAY

One of Victoria's oldest athletic trophies will be at stake Sunday when Victoria West attempts to retain possession of the Jackson Cup in a clash against Cosmopolitan Royals.

First played for in 1914, the trophy has been captured more times by the Wests than by any other club in the long history of the knockout soccer competition.

The two Victoria and District Soccer League squads will play Sunday's cup final on the Victoria High School pitch, starting at 2 p.m.

Margo Lewis Cup Winner

Margo Lewis defeated Ann Shields 6 and 4 Friday to capture the Campbell Cup at Royal Colwood Golf Club.

Teresa Todd defeated Claire Maybie 5 and 3 to win consolation honors in the 44th annual match-play event that began earlier this week.

Babe Ruth Victory

Frank Browne chalked up a 12-4 triumph over Graham Meats in a Cosmopolitan Babe Ruth League baseball game played Friday at Lambrick Park.

Nine Clubs Ready for Race In Women's Softball Loop

Nine clubs are waiting at the starting gate, but a familiar name will be missing when a new Victoria Senior Women's Softball League season opens with two games Monday night at Hyacinth Park.

Victoria Vicettes, powers in women's softball circles for many, many years, are not listed on this season's league roster.

However, Wally Yeamans, manager-coach of Vicettes through the years, is returning for another campaign. Yeamans is guiding Empress Paint, which will tackle Cablevision at 6:30 in one of Monday's games. In the other contest, CFB Roadrunners will meet Macdonald Furniture.

Two games are also slated for Hyacinth Park at 6:30 on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings.

On Tuesday, Westendale Construction tackles Moose Lodge Loyals and Tillicums meet Stockers North Americans.

On Wednesday it will be Esquimalt Combos against Cablevision and Macdonald against Westendale.

Thursday's schedule sends Loyals against Roadrunners and Empress against Tillicums.

Esquimalt and Stockers are junior clubs competing in the senior league, which has slated all games at Hyacinth.

Imagination, Cement Blocks Ideal Garden Fencing

GARDENING
jack beastall

Ornamental cement blocks, although available locally for many years, have never been exploited by the average home gardener.

Several fences are to be seen in residential areas, stark and unimaginative in construction, giving the impression of walls around a prison rather than an ornament to a peaceful relaxing garden. Sixty to 100 feet of monotonous repetition in one design of block is responsible.

Another factor stated by home gardeners is cost; that is, the immediate outlay in cash without consideration of permanency.

A good grade of lumber which has to be painted every second year and have rotten posts replaced every ten years, will prove far more expensive than the cement structure which will outlast the life span of the gardener.

But permanency has its drawbacks. To live with a structure for a lifetime requires a great deal of thought and care in preparing the original plan.

A point to remember is that one block does not give any indication of the overall design.

The original design for the block was laid out by a design engineer on squared paper, then divided into blocks of a suitable size for easy handling. At least four blocks are needed to make a picture.

Designs available locally are shown in the illustration.

The block shown at A has nothing much in the way of design to recommend its use, but four blocks together reveal a stylized four-petal flower with a circular hole for the centre. These blocks are 12 inches square when laid.

The measurements of all blocks are slightly less than catalog dimensions to allow for the space taken by the cement bond.

Design B is more elaborate, presenting an optical illusion. Actually it forms two designs, one basically a diamond, the other the crosses of St. Andrew and St. George.

One or the other pattern seems to dominate according to the angle of view. This is pleasant and interesting when used as part of a patio wall. These blocks are 8 by 16 inches.

Four blocks of design C give a pattern of vertical and horizontal bars dividing a series of circles. This is a more open pattern giving less obstruction to air and light. The blocks are 12 inches square.

All designs in the illustration are drawn to the same scale. You will notice that two 12-inch blocks have the same height as three eight-inch blocks, making is possible to combine different designs into patterns devoid of monotony.

For example, a patio screen could be constructed with a centre panel of design B where the greatest privacy is needed and flanked with the more open designs of C or D. The simple crossovers of E would be used to frame each panel.

Block E has another use which can be exploited. When arranged on end a strong vertical line is formed which tends to increase the apparent height of the structure.

Conversely, when used flat a strong horizontal is formed making the structure appear longer and lower.

Possibly the greatest use to which ornamental blocks have been put in the home garden is as screens for service areas, garbage cans, compost heaps, and tool sheds, but due to lack of imagination in building a pleasing pattern, these screens are often out of character with the rest of the garden design.

Aside from fences and patio walls, many other uses are found once the imagination has been stirred.

Low dividers two feet in height can be used in most gardens. When topped with potted geraniums, begonias if in shade, or small tubs of mixed annuals, they will be unusually attractive.

Blocks A, B, C or D can be set flat on the soil, the design interplanted with annuals to simulate a miniature knot garden.

Square pillars are easily built with any of the blocks shown, forming a solid structure for roses, clematis or other climbers when a focal point is needed, or to give height to a bed of roses.

The same pillars can be used to support a wooden archway or pergola.

In a terraced garden a low wall (16 inches high) along a transverse path gives a feeling of security, and the same height wall each side of simple steps can make a feature in the garden.

Unwanted views are often the greatest problem in garden design, especially on a small lot in a built-up area.

If we could build a 12-foot fence around the garden that problem might be solved, but others would be created.

Ornamental blocks can be the answer, for even a low screen at a strategic point will draw the eye away from the distraction beyond.

When using ornamental blocks the basic rule governing all garden structures must be applied. Keep everything in proportion, or in scale. No structures should dominate; all structures should supplement, or accent, the overall layout.

The true picture will not be apparent until plants have grown sufficiently to soften the geometric harshness. That is why the long range picture should be constantly in mind.

WORK FOR WEEK

Plant gladiolus corms in groups behind lower plants to hide stems after flowers have faded. A second planting at the end of month will give flowers in late August into September.

Remove tulip heads before petal fall; see that enough moisture is at roots of narcissi and tulips during period of bulb development which lasts as long as leaves remain green.

Sow hardy annuals outdoors where to bloom — white alyssum, godetia, clarkia (new varieties are lovely) larkspur (doubles) and new varieties of Scotch or Pot-marigold, and mignonette.

In a small bed outdoors, sow seeds of perennial columbines and lupins. Later, move to rows to grow until fall planting.

Cut off faded lilac heads, especially on small new shrubs. On older plants, cut out weak growths and dead wood. Mulch with old manure and compost, for lilac is a gross feeder. Water well all summer.

Cut off seed heads from auriculas, polyanthuses, to improve plants. Water if necessary and mulch with leafy compost.

Care of tomato plants critical now while waiting to put outdoors. Give abundant air and light, but water sparingly.

Strawberry plants may need a good watering, but must be done with care between plants to avoid spoiling pollen.

Sow Purple Sprouting and Italian Sprouting broccoli thinly where it is to grow. Three seeds at each spacing, later reducing to the one strongest. Sow also leeks, well spaced, using thinnings as green onions.

Seeds of summer squash and marrow can be sown in mounds of compost or on top of inverted turves. These places give a warm soil for roots, as well as a rich and well drained soil. Zucchini seed will produce delicious small fruits in a little over six weeks from sowing if the seeds are covered with a bottomless box and glass after sowing until the little plants are well established.

Jobs for All (With Experience)

By DAVE CLIMENHAGA
Times Staff

Prime Minister Trudeau says there are jobs for anyone who wants one badly enough, but in Victoria you had better have experience if you want to work.

According to many persons involved in hiring people, you need a special skill or be willing to work unusual hours for low pay to find employment.

Marshal Burgess, a Canada Manpower senior counsellor, said most jobs left unfilled in Victoria are for skilled workers in the restaurant or automotive fields.

Even these jobs, he said often go unfilled because people put "too many limitations" on the jobs they are willing to take. That means, if you won't work at night, take split shifts, or work for low pay, you might have to wait a long time for a job.

But there are some jobs: Victoria's restaurants are usually short of experienced waitresses and experienced female short order cooks, Burgess said.

Other positions employers have trouble filling are mostly in the automotive field, he said.

Experienced service station attendants and mechanics with British Columbia papers can usually find jobs.

Burgess said a few jobs such as life insurance and mutual fund salesmen are always abundant.

The reason people don't want those jobs, he said, is that "they're just not desirable."

There is a shortage of secretaries who can take shorthand faster than 80 words per minute.

Experienced older stock clerks and bank tellers can get work without too much trouble.

He said it is difficult to find jobs in the trades except for a few non-union jobs or positions with salaries below union rates.

Burgess said the jobs existing for non-experienced workers are usually not advertised with Manpower.

"Entry jobs are primarily found by people on the street by knocking on doors."

Manpower describes positions that need no experience as "entry level" jobs.

The few entry jobs Manpower gets are usually minimum wage jobs for employers with bad records, he said.

Often "the employer expects an awful lot for what he wants to pay."

The Oak Beach Hotel on Beach Drive has had some problems getting experienced help but lots of applications from students for entry jobs.

* * *

Joseph Huebner, manager of Paul's Motor Inn, said he has no trouble getting employees but that there is a high turnover. He blamed this on the unreliable employees he has found.

"They don't give a dam about employment," he said.

Several other Victoria hotels and restaurants said they have no trouble getting employees for jobs that don't need experience.

There is also a shortage of skilled applicants for nurse's aide jobs.

Maria Dundas, administrator of the Richmond Heights Private Hospital, said she will only carry one untrained person at a time.

"Nurses aides are a pretty transient lot," she added.

Most of the private hospitals contacted claimed to have trouble finding aides. The major hospitals have plenty of applications for the position but not many jobs.

An administrator at Royal Jubilee Hospital suggested the difference might not be caused by a nursing aide shortage.

"It could well be their rates of pay," she said.

A check revealed that major hospitals pay substantially more than the private hospitals. The average salary for an aide in a private hospital is close to the minimum wage.

One bright spot was the Empress Hotel which a spokesman said needs about 50 persons.

The unskilled jobs are on shifts, often on nights and weekends, mostly for maids, kitchen staff, and bell hops.

He said he gets some applications but jobs are often turned down when people find out the hours.

An applicant "doesn't have to be experienced" he said, "just a good kid who wants a job."

We Want Direct Talks With Firms, IWA Says

The International Woodworkers of America told Labor Minister James Chabot Friday it wants to negotiate directly with the forest industry, and not with interference from a third party.

IWA regional vice-president Jack Moore said following a meeting with Chabot Friday afternoon that the forest industry should make the first move in opening new negotiations.

Moore said the industry, represented by Forest Industrial Relations, should propose "something concrete" in the way of a wage proposal and other benefits before talks could resume.

Moore made the statement after a meeting in Chabot's office where earlier Friday Forest Industrial Relations representatives had met with the minister.

"We prefer to negotiate as we did in 1968 without having a third party in the picture," Moore said.

Chabot said a few minutes later he agreed with this approach: "That's the way I'd like to see all contract disputes settled, by negotiations directly between the parties. That's what collective bargaining is all about," Chabot said.

Chabot said the talks were not aimed at any immediate breakthrough but were exploratory, for the purpose of finding what is necessary to get talks started again.

He said he hopes to make a suggestion to both sides next week in the hope of accomplishing this.

The minister added, in response to questions, that the use of the government's arbitration powers through the B.C. Mediation Commission "hasn't even been considered" at this point.

The meetings with Chabot were arranged after sessions with Mediation Officer Clark Gilmour earlier broke down.

FIR has said it will bargain only after the resumption of work by some 800 fallers on wildcat strike. The walkout has not had the approval of the IWA but the union wants a settlement first.

Chabot said he was not prepared to say the fallers' actions were unreasonable, when asked about their action.

Universities Warned on Wooing

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario's universities have been warned against using unethical tactics to woo prospective students in efforts to boost slumping enrolments.

John B. Macdonald, executive director of the Ontario Council of Universities, said in an interview Friday that he will instruct universities not to subsidize or entertain students in order to persuade them to enrol.

Several of Ontario's university professors met in Ottawa earlier this week to discuss reports that some universities are engaged in active recruiting, he said.

"I had calls from one or two presidents about this and we met to find out what was going on," Mr. Macdonald said.

They found no real problem, he said, just concern that there might be.

"We agreed it was important to provide information to prospective students but that it would be improper to subsidize them in any way, such as paying for their meals or travel expenses to visit universities."

FEWER APPLYING

Applications for university admission are down about six per cent across the province. Most of the decrease is a result of a 5.5-per-cent decline in the number of Grade 13 students who have aplied for admission.

Walter Pitman, dean of arts and science at Trent University in Peterborough, said "the pressure to haul them in by the scruff of the neck wherever they can find them is certainly there."

The University of Windsor now has a program where it invites prospective students to spend a couple of days on campus to see how they like the place.

Rod Scott, secondary school liaison officer and assistant to the president at Windsor, said prospective students pay their own way but are given a free room in residence.

York University in Toronto has organized what it calls Operation Breakthrough and is sending teams of professors around the province over the next two weeks to talk to prospective students. They will visit 20 major centres in Ontario, plus Montreal.

The University of Waterloo often arranges programs for busloads of visiting students but pays none of their expenses, said President Bert Matthews.

Mosquito Curbs Breakthrough

WASHINGTON (AP) — United States government scientists say they have scored what could be a major breakthrough in the control of disease-bearing mosquitoes without the use of DDT or other chemical pesticides.

Agriculture department scientists, who directed the research, say the use of tiny parasitic worms which bore holes in mosquito larvae "holds particular promise" for controlling the insects.

The tiny worms, called nematodes, are being field-tested by the U.S. public health service in El Salvador and by the World Health Organization in Taiwan and Thiland.

A key to the experiment was the development of a low-cost method of mass producing a species of nematodes, Reesimermis Nielseni, which attack only mosquitoes.

The production system was developed by the agricultural research service at Lake Charles, La., by Dr. Harold Chapman, laboratory director, and Dr. James J. Petersen, entomologist, with help from Dr. William R. Nickle, a research service nematologist at Beltsville, Md.

The procedures are described in the May issue of Agricultural Research, a magazine published by the agricultural department.

DDT CHEAPEST PESTICIDE

At present, DDT is the cheapest and favorite pesticide for controlling mosquitoes in malaria areas of the world. Malathion, a potent but less persistent chemical, also is used.

Laboratory tests during a two-year period have shown the worms infect 13 of 19 known kinds of mosquitoes in Louisiana and have a 100-per-cent kill record among insects they infect, scientists say.

Although mosquitoes are the natural and only known hosts for the Reesimermis Nielseni nematode, the worms usually only kill while the mosquitoes are in the "wiggler" or larva stage of development.

The larvae develop from eggs and, if they survive, turn into adult mosquitoes which then can carry many diseases, including sleeping sickness or encephalitis as well as malaria.

Because of the specialized circumstances involving the nematode's attack during only the larva stage, the worm's distribution is spotted under natural conditions.

Scientists say, however, that mass production of the worms will enable man to spread them over large areas artificially, much the same as chemicals are applied now.

The Love Bugs Aren't

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — A host of love bugs, tiny black critters that fly in tandem, have inundated central Florida again this spring and an insect specialist says their vast numbers may be because birds and other animals don't find them tasty.

Even the voracious and seemingly omnivorous dragon fly rejects the love bugs, says Dr. Lawrence A. Hetrick, an entomologist with the University of Florida's Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences in Gainesville.

"If they were present in normal numbers, the public would not be aware of them," Hetrick said. "Except for their growing population, they would be confined to wooded areas."

Love bugs, who get their name because they fly in mated pairs, swarm in large numbers along the highways about four weeks each spring and fall. They quickly coat the windshields and grills of automobiles.

Hetrick said the sterilization technique used to combat screw worm flies won't work on love bugs because the screw worm female only mates once while the love bug mates repeatedly.

Cartoonist Dies

CHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Luther C. Phifer, 86, an editorial cartoonist whose works appeared in New York and national publications for 30 years, died Monday. Phifer's drawings appeared in the New York Tribune, the New York Evening Post, Political Review, and Life and Judge magazines.

THE GAME OF THE NAME

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — Have you run into a gang of elk, a dray of squirrels or a set of badgers lately?

If so, you probably thought of them as just a bunch of critters.

Not so, says Dr. William Burns, executive director of the San Diego Museum of Natural History. During much of his career he has compiled a lexicon of terms describing, from a literary standpoint, groups of birds and beasts.

For example, it's a crash of rhinoceroses.

A sounder of wild swine.

If you don't want a murmuration of starlings or an unkindness of ravens in the yard, Burns suggests setting a clowder of cats after them.

How about an earth of foxes? An exaltation of larks? A pitying of turtle doves? An ostentation of peacocks? An army of herrings?

CROSS-CANADA WORKOUT

A unique "sports caravan" aimed at helping athletes and administrators opens a national tour with a five-day visit to Victoria next week.

The caravan is sponsored jointly by the fitness and amateur sports directorate of the department of health and welfare and Prudential Insurance Company.

"When you visit the caravan, don't expect to be entertained," a spokesman said today.

"You should be prepared to listen, observe and research the resources the same as you would in a library, so that you can take away with you answers and techniques you can make use of."

One feature allows young skaters to be filmed, then watch their performance on instant replay in the 40-foot van, while their strong and weak points are pointed out by skilled personnel travelling with the project.

The May 15-20 Victoria visit at Memorial Arena opens at 11 a.m. Monday, in conjunction with Victoria Days. Next stop is the Hyack Festival at New Westminister May 23-28, then on to the interior before winding up the B.C. visit late in June in Vancouver.

The tour winds up early next year in the Maritimes.

"Thecaravan is set up to assist coaches, administrators, educators, officials, service groups, trainers and all other interested in developing sport as part of our culture," said a spokesman.

"Sport officials . . . and certainly mature athletes can all gain from a visit to the sports caravan, and they are all welcome."

Doris Day's Son Sues

LOS ANGELES — Terry Melcher sued his mother, actress Doris Day, Friday to find out how much she has made since 1955.

The probate proceeding seeks the accounting of Miss Day's earnings because a contract gave her late husband, Martin Melcher, 25 per cent of her salary. Melcher, who died April 20, 1968, was Miss Day's manager. Miss Day's son is executor of his father's estate.

The suit asks that the estate receive 25 per cent of Miss Day's earnings from 1955 until Melcher's death and 12½ per cent of the gross since then.

NORTHAMPTON, England — One of the quintuplets born here a week ago to 24-year-old Susan Furlow died today, leaving one still alive. Marc, the survivor, was reported to be making progress.

Two of the babies died the day they were born and another the following day.

NEW YORK — Television personality Dick Cavett and Thomas Hoving, Metropolitan Museum of Art director, have urged the U.S. government not to deport Beatle John Lennon and his wife, Yoko Ono.

Having testified at a deportation hearing Friday about Lennon, "If he were a painter he would be hanging in the Metropolitan Museum, benevolently on the wall."

The government is seeking to deport the Lennons on grounds that he was convicted of marijuana possession in Britain. The hearing was adjourned to Wednesday.

MIAMI — Yippie leader Abbie Hoffman told an anti-war rally Friday his group will "Mine" the Florida white house at Key Biscayne today with "a symbolic harmless yellow balloon mine."

Hoffman told 2,500 students at a University of Miami rally "these bombs won't explode, but he President Nixon will get the feeling of what it's like to be surrounded by mines."

Film actors Donald Sutherland and Candice Bergen flanked Hoffman on the speakers' platform as he explained the balloons would surround the president's compound as near to the shore as possible.

TURIN, Italy — Giovanni Bertone, 88, founder of the famous Bertone coachbuilding firm which has produced some of the world's most stylish car bodies, has died, it was announced today. Bertone died on May 10 but his family requested that the news of his death be published only after the funeral.

Saanich municipal clerk Gordon Hayward will represent Vancouver Island members at the 26th annual conference of the International Institute of Municipal Clerks this summer.

Meetings from Aug. 13 to 17 are being held in Canada for the first time, in Calgary, and are expected to draw more than 300 municipal clerks from all parts of North America.

OTTAWA — Dr. Roger Gaudry, 59, vice-chairman of the Science Council and rector at the University of Montreal, Thursday was officially named as new chairman of the Science Council of Canada, effective May 24.

A. E. Pallister, vice-president of research and development of Kenting Ltd. of Calgary, was named vice-chairman.

Dr. Gaudry replaces Dr. O. M. Solandt, 67, the chairman of the Science Council since it was formed as a special advisory body to the government in 1966.

LOS ANGELES — Francis Gary Powers, the U2 spy plane pilot whose crash landing in the Soviet Union resulted in cancellation of a summit meeting, has joined a Canadian aircraft equipment firm.

Powers was named senior project sales administrator—communications for Garrett Manufacturing Ltd., Rexdale, Ont. The firm is a subsidiary of Los Angeles' Garrett Corp. It manufactures communications equipment for aircraft and rescue devices.

KUALA LUMPUR — A rubber tapper's wife stabbed and chased off a tiger with her knife after it attacked and seriously mauled her husband.

According to Bernama News Agency, the tapper, Daud Mat Amin, 68, was rushed to a hospital with serious injuries. Bernama said Amin's wife, Minah, stabbed the tiger with the knife while the animal was mauling her husband. It fled.

Pool Suit Likely in Two Months

A builder's claim for damages against the city of Victoria, for alleged delays in construction of the new Crystal Pool, may be presented in about two months' time.

The estimate was given Friday by Vancouver lawyer William Ellis, who said the actual compilation of the claim is proving "a fairly complicated task."

City hall was informed more than five months ago that the claim would be lodged on behalf of the construction company, H. E. Fowler and Sons Ltd., but since then city officials have heard no more.

The pool's completion date was more than a year late, after a construction walkout contributed to delays.

However, Ellis denied Friday that the delays caused by the walkout itself form the basis for the claim which is being prepared.

"We are dealing with specific delays caused by the failure of the owner to comply with the contract," he said, adding that a separate claim for extras to the contract has already been prepared.

"We are looking at a minimum of five months' delay and this runs into a very large amount of money."

Ellis said "reams" of documents, correspondence and plans have to be studied and analysed in the preparation of the claim for delays.

This task includes taking the original critical path for the construction project, approved by the architect, superimposing it on the actual path of construction and then analysing the resulting delays and costs.

Until the claims have been resolved, the contractor has refused to sign a certificate to settle final accounts for the city.

The contract contains an arbitration clause, and the claim when completed will go before an arbitrator or arbitrators agreed by both parties.

Fallers' Case Decision Reserved

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mr. Justice Victor Dryer of British Columbia Supreme Court reserved decision Friday on an action by MacMillan Bloedel to have 34 fallers found guilty of contempt of court.

The company alleges the fallers violated a Jan. 21 injunction prohibiting concerted work stoppages when they failed to report to work April 18 at its Franklin River logging operation.

It contends that the April 18 stoppage occurred after meetings by the fallers who planned the stoppage to speed up negotiations between the company and the International Woodworkers of America on a pricing formula.

The fallers say that the work stoppage began after a group of men on their way to work saw a sign telling of a fallers meeting.

They say they decided individually to go to to the meeting. Fallers who investigated found there was no meeting.

Mr. Justice Dryer said the main issue for him to decide was whether the men acted in concert or as individuals in failing to report to work.

The fallers returned to work April 19 but since then there have been numerous work stoppages and the work of falling trees now has almost stopped.

Animal Ambulances Set to Roll

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

Just off Burnside Road in Victoria there are three ambulances for animals ready to roll.

But dogs and cats crunched by cars and birds knocked down by windows and wires sometimes lie suffering a long time because people don't know there's a magic number.

The number is 385-6521.

A call to that number will bring the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals—day or night, seven days a week, out to Sooke or up to Sidney or any point in between.

There is no charge.

The SPCA emergency number is listed three places in the phone book. It has been available 24 hours a day for at least a decade.

The society has been in Victoria since 1896. The community generally is recognized as having as many animal-lovers as any corner on earth.

All of which means manager Dave Beeching is left puzzled when he hears cases like one in Brentwood recently. A dog there lay with a broken leg for about 40 minutes before anyone thought to call the SPCA.

He summarizes:

"If there's an injured animal in the community we will go for it, as quickly as we can, anytime in the 24 hours, and the animal's needs are going to come first."

Injured animals fall into one of three groups:

— Those with massive injuries where the only course open is to destroy them.

— Those where injuries are hard to determine. These go directly to a veterinarian, day or night.

— Animals with lesser injuries. These are brought back to the SPCA shelter on Napier Lane. Sometimes they just rest for a day or two to get over the shock.

"The inspector has to decide what to do," Beeching says of the emergency runs. "And if he errs, it's on the side of the animal."

Where an animal is mortally hurt, sometimes a captive bolt pistol is used. Where the SPCA is unable to find homes for animals it is keeping for adoption, "putting to sleep" is by chloroform, carbon dioxide or electrocution, all methods approved by the Royal society, the parent organization in the U.K.

Wild birds are hardest to help, says Beeching, because injuries are usually to wings which are difficult to mend. It's hard too for youngsters to understand injured birds are frequently hopeless cases.

Bird injuries are actually the most common of the three major groups the SPCA is called out to aid. In April for example, the society dealt with 34 injured birds, 28 cats and 25 dogs.

Local Crafts At Victoria Art Gallery

Craft demonstrations will be a feature at Greater Victoria Art Gallery next week in connection with the current Showcase of Victoria Crafts exhibition.

On Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday Arbutus Crafts will be demonstrating silk screen processes from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. and on Friday and Saturday the Victoria Handweavers' Guild will stage demonstrations of handweaving during the same hours.

Are you beginning to think this way about funerals?

☐ I think many people buying a funeral end up paying far more than originally planned, possibly because they are emotionally bewildered at the time.

☐ Money spent on elaborate funerals would be better spent among the living.

☐ I want my funeral, including cremation or burial, to cost under $300.

☐ I think embalming, for purposes of displaying the body, is an unnecessary indignity.

☐ I am repelled by putting a body on display with the face made up to look "natural".

☐ I favour a closed coffin, a private cremation or burial, with perhaps a memorial service after, for friends and relatives.

☐ I feel strongly enough about these matters that I would like to support an organization dedicated to promoting simpler, less costly, more dignified funeral practices.

☐ I would like to receive a simple plan which lets me record my wishes in privacy, so that they may be filed with a non-profit organization I know will carry out my wishes after death. This also saves my next-of-kin from making these difficult decisions under emotional stress.

She Likes Being Her Own Boss

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

Helen Beirnes has worked all her adult life — but she's never had an employer or boss.

Miss Beirnes works for herself and always has. Her business is teaching people about self-confidence and personal development, showing them how to go out and face the world.

It's something she knows a bit about.

Miss Beirnes, 43 today, has been a professional model here and in Europe since her teens. She is president of the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce, has a weekly "talk" show on Cable 10 Victoria and writes a weekly column for The Victorian.

"All of these things came from my initial experience in modelling," she said. Model training gave her the poise and self-confidence to branch out into other fields.

And self-confidence is what Miss Beirnes offers at her National Charm and Modelling School, which she started 15 years ago.

For the past 10 years or so Miss Beirnes' school hasn't had an office or building. She has about 14 private pupils she sees in her home. For the rest, she goes to the students, holding classes in schools, meeting halls, or wherever she's wanted.

The first thing Miss Beirnes does is have her students analyze themselves, try to figure themselves out. Then she starts to work on posture, walking, figure problems, "the rudiments of being graceful." She does wardrobe training, showing students how to select clothes that suit their figure and life style.

Skin care, makeup and hair care are part of the course.

"Then you lift it down to individual things," said Miss Beirnes. If a student has trouble making conversation, she and Miss Beirnes work on that.

Some of her students are women whose husbands have risen in the ranks of the armed forces. They find they're suddenly expected to entertain the Commandant and his wife, and they just don't know how.

Many of her private students suffer from a muscular problem or some kind of emotional breakdown. If they're very unsure of themselves, Miss Beirnes draws them out very slowly, trying to build their confidence. Good grooming is an important part of this confidence, she said.

Given Freedom

"I don't do anything I don't enjoy." Miss Beirnes said. She is given freedom to do what she likes in her weekly column, and on her television show, Outlook, which is filmed live every Tuesday night.

But doing a live show can be perilous because you never know what mishap might occur. A few weeks ago, Miss Beirnes had as a guest an Irishman visiting Victoria to help put on some plays by Irish playwright Brendan Behan. At the end of the show, the Irishman told a bawdy joke about Behan, completely without warning.

"The switchboard just lit up like a Christmas tree" — calls from irate viewers, she said. A Canadian Radio and Television Commission inspector was down the next week, after receiving complaints.

Her role as first woman Chamber of Commerce president in a major Canadian city has been enormously time-consuming.

This week she's been coaching the girls who are Miss Victoria candidates, and every night next week she'll be helping the girls in the Junior Chamber of Commerce pageant. Dress rehearsal is Sunday. The next week, May 20-27, is the Victorian Days celebration, which Miss Beirnes helped initiate last year and is deeply involved in again this year.

Her appointment book is full of 7:30 a.m. breakfast meetings, luncheon meetings, evening lectures and classes.

She finds time to organize and commentate for fashion shows. Last week she helped with a fashion show for retired people at James Bay Lodge. The oldest model was 92.

"If you live in a community you owe it something," she said. Miss Beirnes pays her debt in time and service.

Teen-age Model

Miss Beirnes grew up in Penticton, B.C., and headed for modelling school in New York City when she was 17. After a year in New York she went to Europe where she modelled in private salons for two years.

In 1948 she returned to Canada and, shortly after, moved to Victoria. She continued free-lance work and eventually opened her school. When Channel 6 began in 1956 she had a talk show on it.

She has always worked, although when her children were young she would accept fewer jobs.

Her four children — Valerie, 25, Terry, 24, Lawrence, 22, and Tamarra, 21 — have all left home, so she has only three white poodles and three turtles on the garden pond to take care of. Her husband, Con Watling, is a local businessman.

"I personally don't feel that a child suffers from a mother having an interest in a career," she said. Being a free-lancer, she could plan her career around her family's schedule.

"I have no wish to retire, because what would I do?" asked Miss Beirnes. "I'm doing the work I enjoy."

She sympathizes with some aspects of women's liberation, but doesn't like the militant, placard-waving type of 'libber'.

"I have never found it necessary to be belligerent about being a woman. It's never held me back," she said.

"I enjoy the niceties of being a woman. I don't want to open a door for myself . . . I think we have the best of both worlds."

MONDAY: A WOMAN WHO FEEDS 5,000.

'Probability' of Heart Disease Measured

NEW YORK (UPI) — A mathematical equation has been found capable of measuring the probability of any given healthy, middle-aged male being stricken with coronary heart disease within five years.

Probability exists for all such males. Differences among them are in degrees of probability. A reliable method of separating high probability from low would be useful in preventive medicine.

Solid Base

Dr. Ancel Keys of the University of Minnesota, who has a big name in heart disease research, and 10 scientific collaborators had a solid base for the equation — 11,132 men between 40 and 59 years old.

When first examined all had been free of coronary heart disease. Precise measurements were made of their systolic blood pressure, blood cholesterol levels, smoking habits, and body mass index — height related to weight.

Given Value

These plus age were the established differences or variables among the 11,132 men. The variables were divided into tenths between high und low degrees and each tenth was assigned a mathematical value that could be included in the equation.

Five years after entry into the study, 615 of the men were no longer free of heart disease and of these 214 either had died from or had survived major attacks. Predictions drawn from the equation were "highly correlated" with these actual outcomes.

Of the men, 8,728 were European and 2,404 were American. When based only on the European experience, the equation's predictive power remained high for the American, and vice versa. This showed that ethnic, cultural and lingual differences were not operating.

In further refining their mathemathics for publication by the American Heart Association in its journal, Circulation, Keys and his collaborators found that age, systolic blood pressure and blood cholesterol were "universally powerful predictors of risk" of heart disease. They were less certain about cigarette smoking although they did not diminish its importance as a causative factor. But they did diminish the importance of body weight.

"The conclusion seems inescapable that the incidence of coronary heart disease is strongly influenced by one or more variables unrelated to any considered in these studies," they said. For the question of what these variables might be, their mathematics provided an answer.

But the equation will identify both the men with a much higher than average chance of dying of heart disease within five years and "the men who are most unlikely to become victims" in that time. They offered it as "a tool" for practicing physicians and other health counsellors.

It could "give guidance and perhaps persuasion about possible preventive measures as well as indicating a review of the patient's insurance policies," they said.

Doing The Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

Bags! . . . bags! . . . bags! . . .

There's no doubt about it, bags are really THE thing this season! . . . No, we don't mean handbags but OXFORD bags . . . those wide-legged, cuffed pants which look so smashing on just about every female form . . . whether it's slender as a reed . . . or could use a little calorie-counting . . . (they're cut in such a way as to have a nice slimming effect) . . . we saw a tremendous selection of Oxford bags at the Unicorn this week . . . Cotton bags in bright, vivid colors as well as beige, just $11 . . . Cotton or fortrel doubleknit bags at $16 . . . Devastatingly smart and extremely well-fitting bags with the Jacqueline Familiant label . . . in several different checks, $14 . . . Bags and blazer suits . . . a stunner with natural linen pants and purple or green checked blazer on natural ground . . . Not only does Unicorn have all the latest in bags, but they also have all the right blazers to wear with them . . . in a whole gamut of materials including gingham, cottons and polyesters . . . We're told that for summer short sleeved blazers are the thing . . . And just to touch on the subject of dresses for a moment . . . more graduation dresses have arrived in the past week . . . Go see them at . . . Unicorn, 658 View St., 385-5114.

Look for a new roundness, a new amplitude and sophistication in French clothes next fall.

Say it with flowers . . .

We've always been intrigued with the language of flowers, whereby . . . in an older and more romantic age . . . people were wont to express their sentiments with gifts of the appropriate posies . . . So when we saw the "language of flowers" arrangements which arrived at Sydney Reynolds this week . . . part of a big new shipment of all sorts of English bone china florals . . . we thought them not only exquisitely pretty, but something different and old-worldish which would make charming and meaningful gifts . . . Twelve little bowls of flowers, priced at $10.95 each . . . which is flower language, say anything from "Forever your friend" to "I love you forever" . . . Sweet, don't you think? . . . and if you're not particular about having your flowers talk . . . you'll find numerous other floral arrangements in delicate colors . . . with glossy or dull finish . . . Little place card holders . . . candlesticks . . . salts and peppers . . . Miniature wheelbarrows, swans, shoes and baskets . . . all spilling flowers, and all completely delightful . . . There are china bird ornaments too . . . and little covered ring boxes in various sizes and shapes . . . Sydney Reynolds Ltd., 801 Government St., 383-3931.

The French have an interesting name for the surplice dress . . . "cache-coeur". Literally, "heart hider"!

Gardening . . . the purest of human pleasures! . . .

Hooray for the sunshine and the first balmy days! . . . And doesn't it just make your fingers itch to start messing around in the good earth and exercise that green thumb? . . . The Book Nook has some down-to-earth new gardening books we're sure you won't want to miss . . . "Good Food Naturally", by John B. Harrison, who's been doing organic farming for 25 years . . . A very authoritative book, in soft cover, and only $3.95 . . . "Grow It", by Richard W. Langer is the beginner's complete in-harmony-with-nature small farm guide . . . Beautifully laid-out with drawings, simple explanations . . . and a whole section on honeybees, containing hard-to-come-by information . . . "Growing Herbs for the Kitchen", by Betty E. M. Jacobs . . . who with her husband has a herb farm at Sooke . . . completely fascinated us . . . It tells all about herbs and how to grow them . . . and you won't even need a garden for this . . . just a few flower pots and a sunny spot on your apartment balcony! . . . $5.95 . . . (Also contains a removable herb chart fo rthe kitchen) . . . Other great new gardening books include "The Clear and Simple Gardening Guide", $1.95 . . . for the greenhorn or greenthumb . . . "Landscape Gardening", a beautiful Time-Life book with color illustrations for the sophisticated gardener, $7.95 . . . The Book Nook, 10 Centennial Square, 386-0813.

Accessories for that "final touch of elegance" . . .

"Accessories are so very important today . . . they add the final touch of elegance to a woman's appearance" . . . we plucked this gem of fashion philosophy from an article we've just been reading which set us to thinking about the many quality accessories to be found at Wilson's . . . every last one of them a candidate for that "final touch of elegance" when worn properly! . . . New Liberty scarves have just arrived from London . . . in new patterns, both modern and traditional, and lovely colors . . . And here's something Wilson's haven't had for quite some time . . . really good fabric gloves . . . in either white or beige . . . hand-sewn and either absolutely plain, or with a small stitched design on the back . . . $3.95 for these cool, washable fabric gloves which you'll want several pairs of for summer . . . We're impressed with the shortie stretch gloves too . . . they look remarkably like kid but are really fabric with a finish which can be wiped clean with soap and water . . . White or beige, and only $4! . . . Big fashion news in neckwear is the wide tie, shaped like a man's cravat . . . Wilson's have some eye-catching ones . . . in floral geometric and striped silk or satin . . . Beautiful chain belts in gold or silver color . . . could be the making of a plain dress . . . W & J Wilson, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

British and European stores have bought thousands of dollars worth of Canadian ladies' and children's wear for fall.

If you don't like to travel alone . . .

There are tastes in modes of travel just like anything else . . . Some people prefer to go it on their own, coming and going as the spirit moves them . . . But on the other hand, others don't want to be bothered with details . . . They prefer to have things planned for them and just relax and enjoy each day of their trip . . . With a competent escort to take care of them and their baggage . . . and congenial companions to share their enjoyment . . . If you're in this category, we recommend you talk to Paulin's about Traveleers Tours . . . Traveleers are a highly reputable Vancouver firm who give excellent service, so Paulin's tell us . . . They operate tours all year round by air, ship, rail, or bus to just about anywhere you could think of going . . . fully escorted, from Vancouver . . . and naturally, most of the people on these tours are from B.C. . . . so you're bound to have something in common . . . Ask Paulin's for a brochure on forthcoming Traveleers Tours . . . Just to mention a few we've been reading about . . . California . . . Alaska . . . South Pacific . . . Africa . . . Japan . . . Arizona . . . Hawaii . . . literally dozens and dozens . . . most of them all-inclusive . . . if you'd like to take a trip somewhere, but are not keen on going alone . . . a Traveleers Tour is just the thing . . . Paulin Travel, 1006 Government St., 382-9168.

What's more, Standard has a budget plan that makes payments for this "Deluxe" Group as nearly painless as anyone could wish for . . . would you believe, as low as $19.94 a month? . . . Another 3-room "Economy" group is priced even lower . . . less than $500 for the works! . . . Standard Furniture Co., 737 Yates St., 382-5111.

A custom-made interior design service . . .

We dropped in for chat with Peter Church at Oak Bay Interiors earlier this week . . . and found him absolutely in his element . . . up to his ears designing interiors in homes and apartments for people who've discovered his terrific flair for creating beauty both inside and outside a home . . . custom-designing to reflect a client's personality and lifestyle . . . He has just received a shipment of the most terrific things in the shop on Oak Bay Avenue . . . Reproductions of antique mirrors from France and Italy . . . 18th century cut bronze and crystal chandeliers . . . one particularly attractive one is of wrought iron shaped like a bouquet of poppies, and painted . . . Mr. Church says this would be perfect in a bright sunny room or breakfast area . . . and would blend beautifully with contemporary furniture . . . There's a nice set of four chairs with cane backs and seats in Louis XV style . . . And talk about fabrics and trims! . . . It's worth a visit to the shop just to look at them! . . . We were fascinated with the gorgeous trims from France and Italy . . . to use on curtains, bedspreads, lampshades, etc. . . . in conjunction with matching fabrics . . . Mr. Church is prepared to renovate or remodel any room in your home . . . including kitchen and bathroom . . . and he doesn't consider any job too small for his unique service! . . . Oak Bay Interiors, 2234 Oak Bay Ave., 598-4712.

Practical Law Uses Attract UBC Co-Ed

By DAVID MAY
Times Staff

Karen Nordlinger's interest in law was waning.

Then the 23-year-old University of British Columbia student applied for a summer job as a probation constable with the City of Victoria Police Department.

"Now I'm happier, being involved with the practical aspects of law, rather than pure theory," said Miss Nordlinger in an interview this week.

Two weeks ago, Miss Nordlinger was hired, along with three male law students, by Victoria's police department. The four are paid as probation constables for their four months' work.

At a time when students and police often appear to be at opposite ends of the political spectrum, she shows a genuine concern for better understanding by the young of the police.

Surprising Intelligence

She admits she has not hand much contact with those who have the "police are pigs" mentality. But she was surprised to discover for herself just how intelligent the average policeman is.

"They know their law more thoroughly than many an academic," said Miss Nordlinger.

As the sole female "summertime constable" and one of two policewomen at the Victoria station, she has already become accustomed to good-natured joking from the men in blue.

Karen is well used to a male environment, however. UBC's law faculty has almost 600 men and only 40 women.

Karen's father spent the last two years of his working life with the Shore Patrol and, consequently, many of the Nordlinger family visitors and acquaintances were connected with law enforcement.

No Family Pressure

But decision to go into law was not based on any pressure from family or friends. She decided, after completing a BA at University of Victoria, to try one year of law. The unrelenting pace of the course and the possibility of another three gruelling years before being admitted to the Bar almost made her switch to something else.

But the new challenge of four months' practical experience has made Miss Nordlinger more determined than ever to pursue a career in law.

To date, Miss Nordlinger's work with local police has included visiting Family Court, talks with probation officers, witnessing the arrest of two shoplifters and target practice with a police revolver.

Why is a pretty girl like Karen Nordlinger training for a profession like law, dominated by men and with very few women in any of its senior ranks?

"Maybe that's why," came the quick reply.

Food Poisonings Up in U.K.

LONDON (CP) — The fashionable restaurant, high in a busy London department store, looked spotless.

Well-spaced tables were set with white cloths and heavy, polished silverware. Waitresses moved efficiently among the customers, taking orders and dispensing sage advice on the best food of the day.

The only irregular feature, in fact, was the number of times the waitresses jerked nervously, sometimes emitting a muffled squeal.

What was upsetting the girls, understandably enough, was a number of mice — six, by a quick count — which scurried furtively around the carpeted floor, gobbling bits of food that fell from tables.

Showed Terror

Several other guests who noticed the rodents' activity showed varying degrees of terror initially but most quickly regained their stoic British composure.

Whether the mice were regular inhabitants was hard to discover — the staff was eager to talk about virtually anything else.

But the incident does illustrate a growing problem troubling London health officials: Unhygienic conditions — sometimes approaching filth — in a fairly large number of restaurants, from sleazy coffee shops to highly-rated dining spots.

A small restaurant off Fleet Street, for example, used to be frequented by Canadian Press reporters, among others, until one of the group noticed a number of cockroaches rambling undisturbed along the walls.

43 Deaths

As a result of conditions like these, health officials say, food poisoning in London is increasing. Last year, 43 peopple died and an estimated one million were "seriously affected" by eating contaminated food.

Fighting against the dirty kitchens is a dedicated band of 5,000 public health inspectors who complain that the penalties which are imposed for offences against rules of hygiene are inadequate.

Selfridges, the vast London department store, was recently fined $52 for sending out food that was mouse-contaminated and Lyons and Quality Eating Houses, who hold the franchise for the ubiquitous Wimpy Bars, are among others fined for similar offences.

Rowan Thomson, a journalist with the New Statesman, said he recently visited 40 restaurants, cafes and hotels in central London with health officials and two-thirds of these, in the authorities' opinion, needed immediate rebuilding or cleaning.

"Cockroaches were climbing out of open drains in kitchens and walking straight into food; mice droppings covered kitchen and bakery store rooms, rats were scampering around dark corners and in one Italian trattoria, a casually-discarded menu in the kitchen contained no less than four varieties of insects," Thomson wrote in a recent edition.

London's senior public health inspector, E. W. Kingcott, said recently a survey of 100 stores showed that a fairly high proportion of food being sold is stale and at times is mouldy and infested.

One supermarket had three-year-old cake mixes for sale that were litterally filled with insects, Kingcott said. Eighteen per cent of the pies on sale in small shops were found to be stale or mouldy, although the percentage in large stores was lower.

"The immediate impression is that in the large percentage of all categories of premises, at least one item of food was offered for sale beyond the manufacturer's recommended shelf life," Kingcott concluded during a news conference held just before lunch.

Lung Cancer Signs Spotted in Exam

RICHLAND, Wash. (AP) — Distinctive noncancerous cells develop in the lungs up to nine years before actual lung cancer begins, a Colorado pathologist says.

If the cells could be spotted through regular physical checkups, lung cancer could be delayed or prevented, Dr. Geno Saccomanno, a hospital pathologist from Grand Junction, Colo., said this week.

He spoke at the 12th annual Hanford biology symposium, which opened earlier this week.

"We've learned a lot about the biology of cancer of the lung," he said, "but it's a long research process. Cancer of the lung is not something that develops overnight."

Gov't Approves Methadone Use

By JEFF CARRUTHERS
Special to The Times

OTTAWA — The federal government has decided it will allow methadone, a heroin substitute, to be used as a pain killer under certain circumstances as well as a treatment for heroin addiction, under controls to come into effect June 1.

And because the deadline for doctors to obtain the necessary government approval to use methadone is less than a month away, the government has also decided to give temporary authorizations to doctors under certain circumstances.

It has been learned that the government is particularly concerned that some doctors — especially those located in smaller communities, without existing methadone treatment clinics nearby — might be unable to obtain full authorization to use methadone within a month.

Fear Expressed

This in turn, the government fears, could leave some heroin addicts now being treated with methadone without a legal source of methadone, forcing them back "on the street" to obtain illegal drugs to maintain their habit.

Finally, according to a "Dear Doctor" letter being sent this week to all physicians in Canada, amendments are now being drawn up by the government to bring the controls on methadone into effect June 1.

Under these amendments to the Narcotic Control Regulations licensed dealers and pharmacists, as well as doctors, who contravene the new controls will be liable, on summary conviction, to a fine of up to $500, a jail term of up to six months, or both.

According to the "Dear Doctor" letter, the amendments will have the following effect:

- It will be an offence for a licensed dealer or a pharmacist to supply methadone to a practitioner unless the doctor has been named in an authorization issued by the Federal Health Minister.
- It will be an offence for a pharmacist to fill a prescription for methadone unless the prescription was issued by a doctor named in an authorization issued by the minister.

Authority Needed

- And it will be an offence for a doctor to prescribe, administer, give, sell or furnish methadone to any person or animal unless authorized by the minister.

The "Dear Doctor" letter is accompanied by a set of guidelines for use by doctors in affiliating with methadone treatment clinics — as required under the planned controls — and in applying for authorization from the health minister.

Feminine Hygiene Sales Program 'Classic' Error

CALGARY (CP) — The methods of marketing feminine hygiene spray have "tarred all business" and the advertising and sales professions, says Harold Buchwald, chairman of the Canadian Consumer Council.

"The highly successful recent promotion of the feminine hygiene spray . . . is a classic example of marketing short-sightedness," he told a Chamber of Commerce meeting this week.

Buchwald, of Winnipeg, head of a group of 20 citizens with a government mandate to advise on consumer interests, said a product was created for which there had been "virtually no demand and certainly no necessity."

"That product was merchandised and promoted with . . . the brilliant characteristics of the marketing and advertising professions — very slick and witty ads, catchy product names, alluring packages, and subtle personal identification techniques."

He also said Canadian authorities are "shortly expected" to follow the lead of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration last December, which placed hexachlorophene on prescription and required warning labels on most lower-concentration drug and cosmetic products.

He told commerce delegates that consumers have no muscle.

There is a real need for a Ralph Nader organization in Canada, he said, because business has staff and financial resources to study and prepare briefs to support its interests.

FOOD PRICES UNDER SCRUTINY

By ERIC DOWNTON
Special to the Times

OTTAWA — Who is to blame for these soaring grocery bills? Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau promised the Commons this week the government would study a proposal by Mrs. Grace MacInnis that an investigation should be made to see if supermarkets and food producers are perpetrating "inordinate mark-ups."

Mrs. MacInnis (NDP Vancouver-Kingsway) said the cost of food used in the home increased seven point four per cent from April, 1971, to April, 1972.

In food chains such as George Weston profits rose to nearly three point five million dollars in the first three months of 1972, Mrs. MacInnis said.

She asked if the government would undertake to make an investigation to see if this increase in the cost of food was due "to inordinate mark-ups by supermarkets or excessive profit taking by canners and processors of food."

Trudeau replied he would certainly see that the suggestion was studied.

"However, according to our statistics, the gain was in line with the March-April changes in the past five years," Trudeau said.

"If you look at the average change between those two months for the past five years and the overall consumer price index, it was slightly less this year than it has been in the past five."

Forecast for Monday, May 15, 1972

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent on practical issues, including costs and home security. Be meticulous in handling details. Thorough approach now is a necessity. What appears to be a restriction could work to your ultimate benefit.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take special care in traffic. Some neighbors, relatives are argumentative. Be ready to answer questions, accusations. Be co-operative, but refuse to be intimidated. You will comprehend.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Domestic environment is emphasized. Money log jam is broken. You obtain what you need. Debts can be paid. Count your change. Don't be in too much of a hurry. Some promises now are worthless. Take cash — let credit go.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You get going on projects, special activities. Prestige is on line. Take initiative. Those in authority are on your side. Know it and act like you know it. Perfect techniques. Get rid of wasteful procedures.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Handle added responsibility. Heed voice of experience. Older individual can be valuable ally. What was a secret will be revealed. Some philosophical concepts are due for drastic revisions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Finish what you start. Broaden horizons. Welcome aid from friends. Put aside false pride. Gain indicated through past efforts. Hopes, wishes are activated — many will be fulfilled. Opposite sex is involved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Ambitions are activated. You can make new start. Stress independence, originality. Be confident. Rules will bend in your favor. One who does much talking actually is bluffing. Stick to principles.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Travel is accented. You make known your views. Reception is quick. You get decisions. Work methods are altered to suit your needs. You fight for what you get — but you get what you want. Aquarian lends helping hand.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Areas usually considered taboo now command attention. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Questions are answered concerning wills, legacies, policies. You are provided with privileged information.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Dispute indicated in connection with special agreement, close relationship. Marriage, partnership are featured. You draw to you persons who act in pugnacious manner. Key now is to wait, observe and retain sense of humor.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Relatives seem to want to involve themselves in your work. See beyond what appears to be obvious. Make it clear that you have a life of your own to live. Initiate changes long overdue. Get going!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Creative efforts now can be profitable. Obtain hint from Aquarius message. Welcome chance for change of scenery. Personal magnetism attracts opposite sex. You succeed, feel better and gain greater self-identity.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are creative, able to appreciate art and music. Your own voice is compelling. Your social life now is on upswing. More persons will appreciate you. If single, marriage could be upcoming. You will be going places, doing things and dancing to your own tune.

(To find out more about yourself and astrology, order Sydney Omarr's 50-page booklet, "The Truth About Astrology." Send birthdate and 75 cents (no cheques) to Omarr Booklet, care of The Times.

Son Anxiously Awaits That Long-Lost Letter

DEAR ABBY: My sister and her husband separated about three months ago. They have two children, 6 and 3. The father moved to a neighboring state (with another woman), but before he left, he promised the six-year-old that he would write to him.

Abby, that poor kid has been going to the mailbox looking for a letter every day since his father left and so far he hasn't received a line.

Would it be wrong of me to write a letter, making believe it was from the lad's father? I'd say something like, "The reason you haven't heard from me is because I've been so busy getting settled;" then I wouldn't mention anything about writing again, so the little fellow wouldn't get his hopes up and expect another letter.

I know it would make my nephew very happy, and there would be no harm done.

What do you think, Abby? — Auntie.

DEAR AUNTIE: I think you mean well, Auntie, but I'd advise against it. William Penn said: "A good end cannot sanctify evil means, nor must we ever do evil that good may come of it." I'm with William.

DEAR ABBY: This is my problem and you are my last resort:

Five months ago my father in law borrowed a large amount of money (for us anyway) because he said he wanted to get a divorce. At the time we didn't know that he was planning a big wedding and a two-week honeymoon in Mexico.

The unwritten agreement was that he would pay us back in 60 days. Well, it is now five months later and we have not seen one dime of our money.

My husband has been out of work and our baby has been sick off and on for the last couple of months, and we could sure use our money.

If my father in law didn't have the money, I could understand, but he seems to have money for furniture and house improvements. Any suggestions? Hopeful.

DEAR HOPEFUL: It's those "unwritten agreements" that are hard to hold people to. Talk to a lawyer. You may have given your father in law a much more generous wedding gift than you intended to.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "FIFTEEN AND FRIGHTENED": Telephone your local department of public health at once and make an appointment to see a doctor. You will be treated free of charge if your suspicions are correct. And yes, it will be strictly confidential! V.D. is a disease, not a crime.

CONFIDENTIAL TO FEELING LOUSY: Yes, confession migh help. But after all these years, tell it to a priest. What your husband doesn't know can't hurt him.

Feminine Mystique Bared

Dr. Harriet McCurdy Blanchard, University of Victoria biologist, will speak at the annual dinner of the University Women's Club of Victoria Wednesday, May 17, at Craigdarroch College on the campus.

Dr. Blanchard will talk about the feminine mystique in science. Currently working on pigment cell research, she was host last year to the first conference on Vancouver Island on comparative endocrinology.

The event will begin at 6:15 p.m., with dinner at 7 p.m.

Intrepid Explorers Link Continents on Wheels

LONDON (AP) — "It was hell," says British Army adventurer, summing up in these words the expedition that hacked and blasted its way across some of the most treacherous teritory on earth —the Darien Gap.

Major John Balshford-Snell and 33 British scientist and soldier companions made the first wheeled crossing of the 300-mile stretch of savage territory straddling the border between Panama and Colombia.

During the 99-day trek they survived tarantulas the size of dinner plates, ants whose sting could numb a man all day and poisonous snakes lurking in foul swamps. Five Colombian soldiers aiding the Britishers were sucked to their deaths in an oozing mud swamp.

The crossing, completed late last month, closed the last unexplored gap in the Pan-American Highway network.

The roadway is to run uninterrupted 18,000 miles from Alaska to Tierra del Fuego at the southern tip of South America.

Only the forbidding strip between Chepo, Panama, and Chigorodo, Colombia is still to be constructed.

Before Balshford-Snell led his men through, no one had crossed in on wheels.

A two-truck team of Royal Engineers now is pressing down South America toward Tierra del Fuego. When they arrive, the British expedition will have driven the entire length of the highway network.

Balshford-Snell, who returned home earlier this week with most of those who crossed the Darien Gap, told a news conference Thursday the explorers moved only three miles a day through swamps, jungles, mountains and rivers.

"There were enormous black ants which drove us mad. And there were thousands of snakes. One of the officers had to shoot one off his boot with his .45 pistol."

Thirty of the 64 members of the expedition who started across the gap were evacuated by light planes, helicopters and boats after they collapsed from exhaustion and jungle ailments.

Abuse of Hospitality Costly for American

Americans who accept Canada's hospitality and then break the nation's laws were rapped in provincial court Friday by Judge William Ostler.

The judge did the international wrist-slapping in sentencing Charles Felix Pinnell, 24, a university student from Ashland, Ore.

Pinnell, who attends Southern Oregon College, pleaded guilty to shoplifting 89 cents worth of Swiss cheese from a Foul Bay Road supermarket Thursday. He had $410 in traveller's cheques and $6 cash when he was arrested.

Ostler fined the accused $250 and ordered the fine paid forthwith. Pinnell told court he was under orders from the immigration department to leave the country because he had overstayed his visit permit.

"I am constantly amazed at young people like you who come to this country, accept the hospitality of the land and then can't obey its laws," Ostler said. "It seems to me the least you could do do if you are going to come here."

Pinnell said he had not wanted to spend his money because it constituted "my whole life's savings."

Geologist Says Fossil Fuel Worries Unjustified

OTTAWA (CP) — Concern over dwindling fossil fuels, such as oil or coal, may be over-exaggerated because scientists are "on the breakthrough point" on ways to use atomic energy resources commercially, says geologist Robert E. Folinsbee of the University of Alberta.

Exploration to find sources to meet conventional fuel needs during the next 20 years still must be carried on, he said, but ways to use other energy sources probably will be commercially practical before the fossil fuels are exhausted.

Dr. Folinsbee, internationally-known geochemist and economic geologist, is president of the International Geological Congress, which will bring together about 5,000 to 6,000 geologists from more than 100 countries at Montreal in August.

One of the 18 technical sessions at the congress will be concerned with ways to use nuclear energy and the problem of the diminishing fossil fuels, he said in an interview.

CAN USE URANIUM

Canada's reserves of fossil fuels "are quite modest at present," with nearly all of them in Alberta, Dr. Folinsbee said.

"Oil reserves are estimated at about 10 billion barrels, with present use at about 500 million barrels a year. About 750 million barrels a year will be needed by 1975."

However, uranium can be used as a fuel—in atomic power plants—although this now is commercially applicable only in limited areas, he said. One pound of uranium, which sells now for about $6, has the energy equivalent of 5,900 barrels of oil, which costs about $18,000.

So work on application of this energy source is under study.

"One reason we don't use it (now) is that furnaces are so expensive."

It costs about $1 billion to build one nuclear furnace.

Another reason is that about two-thirds of the energy released under present fethods of splitting the atom goes into waste heat—thermal pollution—he said. Problems of coping with the waste heat must be overcome.

The United States is planning floating nuclear reactors which would be used far offshore where the large volumes of water would not be affected by the warming.

As well, scientists are working on ways to use the waste heat. He said, for example, warm water created as a by-product might be harnessed to provide central heating for a whole city, then reused when it had cooled.

"Again, the huge cost factors must be considered."

Further in the future, geologists foresee that science might utilize some of the sun's energy methods, he said. Now, using laser beams, scientists are finding ways they can squeeze together several atoms with small atomic weights and harness the heat energy given off by this fusion.

Fusion of atoms is the opposite of the splitting of heavy atoms of the uranium type, but it also provides fantastic possibilities as an energy source, Dr. Folinsbee said.

"We've done it destructively with the hydrogen bomb. Now we must find ways to use it constructively."

INTEREST IN CANDU

Canada has been a leader in many geological research areas and it is expected there will be tremendous international interest in the meeting in Montreal, he said. Visiting geologists also will make field trips to various parts of the country as part of their trip.

For example, many scientists are interested in the Canadian-developed CANDU nuclear power reactors, which are one of the most efficient types in the world—about three times as efficient as American-developed ones—Dr. Folinsbee said.

Some of the Russian delegation, which is expected to number about 150, probably will be particularly interested in field trips to some of the meteorite scars, or "astroblems," found in the Sudbury area of the pre-Cambrian shield in Northern Ontario.

"It's quite clear now that there are a vast number of meteor scars on earth . . . and the pre-Cambrian shield shows a number of these."

Concerns of the geologists attending the congress will be far-reaching, Dr. Folinsbee said.

"They range from astrogeology, concerning the makeup of distant planets, to ziggurat studies, which try to find out what was used to build the ancient Mesopotamian temple towers—ziggurats—a kind of early Babylonian skyscraper."

GOOD ADVICE was obviously ignored by driver of this truck in London, Ontario, who tried to squeeze his 11'6" van through an underpass with an 11'2" clearance. (CP Wirephoto.)

Wright Brothers Claimed Not First

WELLINGTON (AP)—Almost 70 years after Americans Orville and Wilbur Wright made their epic flight at Kitty Hawk, N.C., people here are still claiming that the first man to fly an airplane was a New Zealander named Richard Pearse —and that he beat the Wright brothers by more than a year.

Their evidence is inconclusive and there seems no prospect of anyone producing irrefutable proof to support the claim.

But stories from old-timers and Pearse's indisputable brilliance as an aviator still arouse some hopes that he might have been the first man in the world to pilot a heavier-than-air machine.

Pearse's latest champion is the executive director of Auckland's Museum of Transport and Technology, R. J. Richardson, who intends building a memorial pavilion to house the pioneer's remaining aeronautical exhibits.

To help raise funds for the project, a medal has been struck commemorating Pearse's known achievements.

Richard Pearse was labelled "Mad Pearse" by his turn-of-the-century neighbors at Waitobo Valley, near Timaru, because of his fascination with flying and his study of aeronautics as he did the plowing on his parents' farm.

Sometime between 1900 and 1904 he designed and built a high-wing monoplane of steel and bamboo, with aileron and elevator controls, and powered by his own four-cylinder engine.

It had a wing of 700 square feet and weighed 700 pounds.

Pearse controlled pitch by moving his body in conjunction with the application of an elevator mounted on the trailing edge of the wing.

Small flaps on the wing tips enabled the plane to be banked. There was no rudder, although the front wheel of the undercarriage could be steered.

With his ailerons, which he patented in July, 1907, Pearse was undoubtedly ahead of the Wright brothers. But did he actually get airborne before their flight on Dec. 17, 1903?

No records are able to show with any certainty that he flew any distance before March 31, 1904.

He made several flights that year and on two occasions travelled 150 yards at a height sufficient to clear a 12-foot hedge.

Some believe he flew as early as 1902. But if Pearse deserves recognition for actually accomplishing this, he has only himself to blame for not receiving it.

There would be no mystery at all if he had confided in his contemporaries, left detailed records of his progress, or been a less secretive man about his activities.

Smith — Murray

Arrangements of gladioli, chrysanthemums and carnations and tulle-draped candelabra formed the background for a beautiful wedding ceremony which united Helen Christina Murray and Stephen Edward Smith in marriage at 7 p.m. on Saturday, April 29 in First Presbyterian Church, Prince Rupert. The Reverend Maurice D. McNabb officiated at the double-ring ceremony. The bride is the only daughter of the Honorable William H. Murray and Mrs. Murray of Prince Rupert and Victoria, and the groom is the elder son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter J. Smith of Prince Rupert.

The petite blonde bride, given in marriage by her father, was radiant in a floor-length gown, entrain, of crepe glace. The empire waist, front of bodice, neckline and edges of her long sleeves were trimmed with Guipure lace. Her long flowing veil was caught at the crown of her matching headdress. She carried a cascade bouquet of orchids, pink baby rosebuds and stephanotis, and wore pearl stud earrings, a gift of the groom. The Maid of Honor, Miss Barbara Saywell, bridesmatron Mrs. Geoffrey Clibbett and bridesmaid, Miss Betty Miles, a cousin of the bride, were identically gowned in floor-length pink chiffon which featured hoods trimmed with self-colored Guipure lace. They carried bouquets of orchids and pink rosebuds. Mr. Bill Wasyk attended the groom, and Mr. Craig Smith, brother of the groom, Mr. Ermenio Pucci and Mr. Rick Murray, brother of the bride, ushered the guests. During the signing of the register, soloist Mrs. Mary Bird gave a beautiful rendition of "Because." Mrs. E. J. Smith was organist. The mother of the bride was attired in a creme wool jacket dress with bone-colored accessories. She wore a deep pink floral hat and her corsage was of pink rosebuds and stephanotis. The groom's mother was smartly attired in a robin's egg blue wool jacket dress with navy accessories. Her corsage was a white orchid.

At a reception held at the Prince Rupert Curling Rink, the Honorable Cyril Shelford proposed the toast to the bride. The groom responded suitably. Mr. Bill Wasyk proposed the toast to the three bridal attendants. Mr. Arnold Assman, who acted as master of ceremonies during the evening, read the many telegrams and cablegrams of congratulations from relatives and friends. The beautifully appointed head table, covered by a Madeira cutwork linen cloth was centred by a four-tiered wedding cake made jointly by Mrs. Bert Price of Burnaby, B.C., and the bride's mother, and decorated by Mrs. Thomas McMeekin. Following a delicious buffet supper, dancing was enjoyed to music supplied by Mr. Don Bell and his orchestra. The bridal book was attended by Mrs. Evelyn Mayo of Prince George.

Out-of-town guests included the bride's aunt, Mrs. Helen Miles, and the bride's cousin, Miss Betty Miles, both of Portland, Ore., the bride's cousin, Mrs. Brian Wing of Richmond, B.C., and Mr. and Mrs. Geoffrey Clibbett of Burnaby and Mr. and Mrs. Harold Mewton, the Honorable Cyril Shelford and Mrs. Shelford of Victoria, and Mr. and Mrs. Douglas MacKenzie of Granisle.

The bride's going-away outfit was a turquoise wool dress and coat ensemble with matching straw hat. She wore a white gardenia.

The groom is employed in the family men'swear business and the bride is on the office staff of the Skeena Health Unit.

After a honeymoon trip to Hawaii, the happy couple will reside at 339-4th Avenue East, Prince Rupert.

Murray — Presseau

Monseigneur M. O'Connell officiated at a double-ring ceremony in St. Andrew's Cathedral on April 22, 1972, at 7 p.m. when Yvette Ann Marie, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Presseau of Victoria, exchanged wedding vows with Angus Lamont Murray, son of Mr. and Mrs. Angus Murray of Lillooet, B.C.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was lovely in a floor-length white satin gown trimmed with lace and seed pearls. She wore a floor-length veil attached to a lily-of-the-valley headpiece ad carried a bouquet of white feathered carnations, baby's breath, freesia and lily of the valley. Maid of honor Miss Shirley Weeks, bridesmaids Susan Presseau, sister of the bride, Wynn Coburn, Kathy Murrey, sister of the groom, were gowned alike in mauve and yellow floor-length dresses. They carried bouquets of gold daisies, freesia and baby's breath. Best man was Rolly Elliott, and Messrs. William Nightingale, Rick Holland, Ron Rounds ushered the guests. Master Bradley Murray was ring-bearer.

The reception was held at the Tally-Ho Travelodge. Mr. Reginald Fosker proposed a toast to the bride. The bride chose a navy and white knit pant suit for her going-away ensemble. Following a honeymoon in the interior, the happy couple will reside in Lillooet, B.C.

Out-of-town guests included friends and relatives from Lillooet, Cache Creek, Vancouver, and Saskatchewan.

Koeller — Hackett

Heather Bernice Hackett, daughter of Mrs. Hackett, Victoria, B.C., and the late Arthur Hackett, and Peter Arthur Koeller, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Koeller, Dorval, Quebec, were married on April 21, 1972, in Victoria, B.C.

3 CARDS OF THANKS

Mrs. George Holloway would like to thank relatives, Dr. Forsle and his nurse, Veterans' Hospital, doctors, orderlies, nurses and staff for their wonderful care of my husband. Also the Post Office, especially the Dispatch Department, for their unfailing help all through the two years of my husband's illness, the neighbors and friends. Also the Canadian Legion, Pro Patria, Reverend J. A. Roberts and McCalls. May God bless you all.

The gratitude in our hearts can never be fully expressed, but we want our friends, relatives and neighbours to know how much their kind words and expressions of sympathy have meant to us during our recent time of sorrow in the sad loss of our Wife, Mother and Grandmother, Marjorie Ransom. A special thanks to Reverend R. J. Thompson. — Mr. R. S. Ransom, son Gerald Scott, and Family.

We want to express our sincere appreciation to our many friends and relatives for the kindness and sympathy extended us at the death of our dear Sister, Marjorie Ransom. A special thanks to the members of the First United Church and members of the St. Andrews and Caledonian Society. — Sisters and Brothers.

The Whitfield family and Winnie Calve wish to thank all of Gordies friends and associates for their kindness and sincere sympathy shown to us in the passing of a dear son, brother and friend. — Winnie Calve

9 IN MEMORIAM

DAVIES—In loving memory of my dear husband Ernest Davies who passed away May 13, 1962.
The face I loved is now laid low,
His loving voice is still.
The hand so often clasped in mine,
Lies now in death's cold chill.
I often sit and think of him
When I am all alone;
For memory is the only thing
That grief can call its own.
—Ever remembered by his loving wife Trixie and daughter Doris.

GODWIN—In loving memory of my husband Harry Godwin who passed away May 13, 1960. — Ivy Kathleen.

McINTYRE—In loving memory of Mary Winifred "Billie", who passed away May 14, 1965, Sydney, Australia.
May the heavenly winds blow softly
O'er that dear and hallowed spot
Where sleeps the one we will always love and never be forgot.
—Always remembered by mother and Allan.

McINTYRE—In loving memory of my sister "Billie" who passed away suddenly at Sydney, Australia, May 14, 1965.
I wander by the Seashore.
I listen on the sands—
I stretch my arms right out to you—
In that far away land.
—Sadly missed by her sister Betty.

EXCEPTIONAL WATERFRONT
NEW LISTING
$77,500
This is one of the most original and well designed homes that I have had the pleasure of offering you. It is built TOWARDS THE WATERFRONT and FOR THE WATERFRONT . . . a woodsy British Columbia dream house of outstanding quality. It was custom-built in 1970 with no expense spared in constructing a home that requires the MINIMAL OF MAINTENANCE, while allowing the outdoors, the sea, the Islands to be almost part of the indoor scene . . . a house that truly nestles into the landscape. There are 2600 sq. ft. on three levels — every foot designed for ease and comfort where the family can enjoy the best of two worlds — their boat moored in the bay (steps lead down to the beach) — school within walking distance — university near — downtown in 15 minutes.

DON'T BUY UN

RUBBERNECKING in Tokyo as commuters gaze at a giraffe in a subway station. They've no need to worry, however, as the animal is only a life-sized model used to advertise a nearby zoo. It could give a scare to an unsuspecting passerby, though, since its neck sways from side to side and it appears to graze in the middle of thin air.

FRENCH WITH POLISH

GRIMSBY, Ont. (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau Friday praised a group of Polish-Canadians for singing O Canada in French.

It was "one of the most moving things that ever happened to me," he said when he spoke at the opening of Place Polonaise, a centre for Canadians of Polish ancestry, built by the Polish Alliance of Canada in this lakeshore community 20 miles east of Hamilton.

He told his audience it was wonderful "that you people who already master two languages" should show respect for the symbols of French Canada.

Their action showed a willingness to accept the "more difficult aspect of being Canadian," which he said some other Canadians have trouble accepting.

The choir also sang O Canada in English, as well as the national anthem of Poland.

Mr. Trudeau said Canada's multi-cultural policy permits people to carry on the best traditions they bring from their native land and this makes Canada a better nation.

MEET-THE-PEOPLE TOUR

The prime minister visited Hamilton earlier Friday on the final day of a two-day meet-the-people tour. He was in Toronto Thursday, and flew back to Ottawa Friday night.

He told a group of Hamilton area Liberals at a $25-per-person reception they may be "among the last people who have the privilege of giving money to a political party without being able to declare it as a tax deduction."

He was referring to his announcement Thursday that the government will introduce a bill to limit election campaign expenditures.

Mr. Trudeau also spent 20 minutes at the Hamilton Press Club where he was given an honorary membership.

When he arrived from Toronto by helicopter at a Hamilton high school field, he was greeted by a crowd of about 300. He shook hands with some, mainly youngsters, through a chain wire fence which separated him from the gathering.

Alcoholism Foundation Fears Dissidents' Power Play

So you'd like to know when the Alcoholism Foundation of B.C. is holding its annual meeting?

Unless you are a member, the foundation won't tell.

It's all part of tactics to counter what the foundation sees as a power play by a group of dissidents who apparently plan packing the annual meeting, says executive director E. D. McRae.

If keeping mum on the date seems a trifle unusual, well so are the tactics of the dissidents, he claims.

They are sending in lists of names applying for the $2 memberships.

The tactics gambits came to light earlier this week when several Victoria people claimed their membership applications were being stalled so they couldn't register protests at the annual meeting.

McRae retorted that because of the obvious power play under way, applications were now being considered by the foundation's board of directors. Nobody has been rejected.

He suggested the man behind the protest is Reg. Clarkson, former foundation staff member who was sacked following a noisy public feud several years ago.

Clarkson is now secretary of Data, local community group providing a volunteer counselling service for alcoholics and drug addicts.

A letter to the foundation's directors made public this week complains about lack of "a truly active provincial program" and is signed by Data president Rev. John Lancaster and vice-president Derek Chambers. Other signers are Bill Ogston, former operator of a rehabilitation centre for alcoholics and addicts, and Pat Hillborn.

Friday Clarkson said the annual meeting could not be held May 18, as the dissidents understood, because foundation members had not received the seven days notice required under the constitution.

Quite right agreed McRae in Vancouver. That appears to be the only point of agreement. McRae said all members will indeed get the required seven days advance notice.

So when will the annual meeting be?

McRae passed that question along to foundation president Bill Short. Short said today he had sought legal advice, didn't have to tell and didn't think it would be ethical to because it would give one group an advantage over another.

"Anything I have to say I'll say at the annual meeting," he said.

The foundation is a private agency, founded in 1954, but financed with provincial funds. It's current operating budget is about $385,000.

McRae noted that all its statements and reports are available to the public. He added that none of the people applying through the lists which have been rolling in have troubled to visit the foundation and look into its programs.

LAS VEGAS HOTELS IN PLANE BOMB PLOT

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (UPI) — U.S. federal agents arrested a suspect Thursday in a $2 million extortion plot to bomb 21 hotel-casinos in Las Vegas, Nev., from a private plane.

Nathan N. Marks, 28, identified as a self-employed radio and sales promotion man, was picked up on a warrant issued in Las Vegas. Bail was set at $500,000.

According to Assistant U.S. Attorney Brian O'Neill, Marks proposed the extortion scheme to an unidentified man in Texas about a month ago. The man notified the FBI and agreed to act as an informer.

Province Writer Wins $500

Business writer Peter Myers of the Vancouver Province has won a first prize of $500 in the 14th annual MacMillan Bloedel daily newspaper journalism competition.

Myers' award is for a nine-part series about unusual tradings in mining stock options, leading to some important developments involving the Vancouver Stock Exchange.

Russell Oughtred of the Nelson Daily News won the $500 first prize for smaller circulation dailies with a study of hazards faced by home and business owners outside the area normally served by the Nelson fire department.

Cash awards totalling $1,800 were announced Friday night by Robert Bonner, MB president.

The competition is in two categories, dailies with circulation over 25,000 and those with circulation under 25,000.

Among winners were Ben Pires, formerly with the Alberni Valley Times and now with Canadian Press in Victoria, and Daily Colonist columnist Gorde Hunter.

Pires won a $200 second prize for an eight-part series assessing business, industry and people of the Port Alberni area.

Hunter won $100 and an honorable mention for a three-part series on drug addiction among young people. He also won an honorable mention last year.

PIPELINE SESSION BEGINS ON MONDAY

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Public Utilities Commission opens hearings Monday on proposed construction of a multi-million-dollar undersea pipeline to Vancouver Island that has already been damaged by political dynamite.

The natural gas transmission project, which would connect the island with existing pipelines in central B.C., is one of the hottest potatoes that Premier W. A. C. Bennett's Social Credit government has ever had to juggle.

The fate of the entire project could be at stake during next week's sessions before the three-member PUC, under chairman J. F. K. English.

Four companies and the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority — the crown-owned agency that distributes electricity and natural gas to wholesale and retail customers across the province — have submitted briefs.

Sunday Music At Art Gallery

As part of the Victoria arts and crafts exhibition currently at Greater Victoria Art Gallery, there will be music in the Gallery Sunday afternoon for a couple of hours.

Starting at 2 p.m. Elfreda Gleam will conduct her junior string group in several selections, and at 3 p.m. the Victoria Wind Quintet will take over with a brief program.

The arts and crafts show is the Art Gallery's contribution to Victorian Days events.

It will be on view through May 28 except Mondays at the usual gallery hours.

Special for the Man Who Has Everything

RICHMOND, B.C. (CP) — Not many used-car salesmen would touch Jack Vetterly's car. Its size alone might intimidate the average buyer.

Sr. Mr. Vetterly, chairman of the board of Flecto Coating Ltd. in this Vancouver suburb, is advertising it in Vancouver's newspapers:

"For sale: private railway car; deluxe, 85 ft., fully equipped."

That's right, a railway car. Circa 1928, complete with a lounge, two bedrooms, a porter's room, three bathrooms (two with showers), a dining room, kitchen and storage and freezer space. Furnishings are included in the sale.

So far, about 40 people have expressed interest in the luxurious piece of rolling stock. The purchase price is somewhere between $18,000 and $25,000.

Why is Mr. Vetterly trying to get rid of his private railway car?

"Believe it or not, he wants to buy a grander model," said Art Quinn, the company's marketing co-ordinator who is in charge of selling the old one.

GOV'T AID EXPECTED

VANCOUVER (CP) — The president of the Union of B.C. Municipalities says he is confident the provincial government will come through with cash aid for other centres, similar to its share of $100,000 owed by Surrey municipality to the King George Private Hospital.

"The cases are the same and so are the arguments," said Ald. Ernie Broome of Vancouver who doubles as head of the municipal organization.

"The government is going to have to do the same thing for Vancouver and the other areas."

Broome was commenting on Rehabilitation Minister Phil Gaglardi's announcement that the government will pay its share of the $100,000 owed by Surrey.

Surrey was ordered to pay the money in a B.C. Supreme Court decision after the government set a maximum daily payment for welfare patients in private hospitals.

The court ruled in Surrey's case, and similar judgments were handed down in at least nine other cases, that municipalities were responsible for the full amount billed by private hospitals.

Broome said despite Gaglardi's statement that there was no certainty that similar aid would be given to the other municipalities, he is confident the government will pay its share.

FACTS ABOUT FUNERALS

DID YOU KNOW

★ That you can pre-arrange the Funeral of your choice with any local funeral home and have confidence that your wishes will be followed.

★ That Memorial Services are provided by all association member Funeral Homes.

★ That the convenience of a lcoal Funeral Home has many advantages.

★ That embalming is not an unnecessary indignity but rather a professional service rendered by your Funeral Director.

★ That viewing of the deceased is by the wish of the family.

MIDDLE-CLASS ANIMALS

MARMADUKE

"Yes, but there are thirty dogs in the neighborhood and Marmaduke had to stop and visit with each one."

THE FAMILY CIRCUS

"I didn't have any money to buy you a present, so I found you these pretty rocks instead."

Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: My dog is a chocoholic. He loves chocolate in any form. If I have it in the house, I simply have to give it to him; he won't take no for an answer. But when I do, then he breaks out in a rash and if I give him a lot, he gets diarrhea. Is there something I could give him along with the chocolate that would give him a chance to enjoy it and still counteract its bad effects? It looks to me like he might be allergic to the chocolate and, if so, wouldn't it be reasonable to give him an antihistamine with it? — T. M.

DEAR T. M.: While the antihistamine may help some, it would be more reasonable not to give him the chocolate in the first place. You can undoubtedly find other goodies which he will settle for and which will be better for him. This will become practical, perhaps, only if the other family members do their chocolate gorging elsewhere and don't bring any home.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Our dog caught and unfortunately killed a bird which apparently was a mother as we found one chick trying to hide nearby. We took the baby home and tried to feed it but it died. We were told later the parent bird and the baby were rails. Could you tell us why this baby chick died when it wasn't hurt; when it was offered all the food we raise baby chicks with, as well as wild weed and insects, why it refused to eat? Was it simply scared to death? — M. L.

DEAR M. L.: Fright, and shock related to it, are certainly factors in caring for the young of wild species. But more than likely the infant simply starved to death. Rail rescuing is especially difficult because the young nidifugous chicks require constant care. Unlike the self-feeding chicks of some species, the rail must be beak fed. The parent birds offer their young morsels of insect, seeds and weeds dangling from the beak. (The young bird then takes it directly from the beak.)

This method can often be copied successfully by holding such morsels with round, tipped forceps which can be moved gently up and down in imitation of a bobbing bird's head. However, these chicks not only need to be fed in this manner, but fed very frequently . . . at least hourly when very young.

CAN'T WALK . . . SO HE FLIES

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla (AP) — John Coughlin can't walk, so he flies.

Coughlin, 38, has spent 20 years in a wheelchair.

But his chest and shoulders are strong — so is his spirit.

He drives his wheelchair out to his small single-engine aircoupe, tosses his legs on to the wing and hoists himself into the cockpit.

Now, after two weeks of training and nearly three years after receiving his private pilot's licence, he is qualified to take to the skies when he can't even see them — he has his instrument rating.

"To a flyer, that's the difference between being an amateur and a professional," Coughlin said.

He said he knows of only one other instrument-rated pilot who is paralysed "and he was a military pilot before his injury and all he had to do was re-learn."

"There are four or five others who fly, but just for their own pleasure," he said, adding that he plans to reopen a charter boat business and do his own fish spotting from the air.

Coughlin's aircraft is steered by a wheel instead of by rudder pedals common to most small planes. He stops it with a hand brake.

"I never dreamed I would be able to do anything like this," he said.

"It's something I can do and do well. You don't have to ask me if I enjoy it."

Flood in Hospital

MONTREAL (CP) — A water main burst early today and sent water seeping into the sub-basement and basement of the Queen Elizabeth Hospital in the city's west end.

A hospital spokesman said that some of the water had entered the hospital's power room and the hospital was forced to switch to emergency power supplies until the clean-up operation was completed.

At no time, the spokesman said, was there any threat to patients.

But he said that some operations scheduled to be held today would be postponed until the regular power supply was restored.

2 Good Reasons To Be Happy . . .

Robbie Forgie is a doubly happy little Wolf Cub today.

He's happy because he knows there is still a three-year-old girl alive in the Okanagan whom he saved from drowning last summer. He's also happy because he has been honored for his feat.

Robbie, 9, of 2296 Dunlevy, has been granted the Certificate of Meritorious Conduct by Chief Scout of Canada, Governor-General Roland Michener.

Robbie and his family were vacationing last Aug. 11 at Kalamalka Lake near Kelowna when a crowd gathered on a neaby wharf to see a large fish which had been brought in.

In the excitement, three-year-old Shelley Holmes, of Kelowna, was either accidentlly pushed or fell into about six feet of water off the wharf.

Robbie was the only one in the crowd who noticed. He dashed over and lay himself on the wharf, grabbing Shelley before she went under.

He couldn't lift her out of the water, however, until he got help from a woman who had been on the shore and noticed the activity.

Robbie is a member of the 5th Garry Oak Wolf Pack. He is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Ronald Forgie.

And the pleasing aspect of it all is that the little girl Robbie saved is the daughter of the Forgie's good friends from Kelowna.

Doing Poorly

And Now . . . Here's Max

HALIFAX (CP) — Broadcast humorist and mimic Max Ferguson delivered a convocation speech with a difference at Dalhousie University here Friday.

"As I do not intend to throw the mantle of challenge upon your shoulders," he told the graduates, "you will find that mine is not a traditional address."

He then proceeded with his well-known impersonations of Canadian political figures, including Prime Minister Trudeau, Opposition Leader Stanfield, and former prime ministers Pearson and Diefenbaker.

Ottawa To Curb Toronto

TORONTO (CP) — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau says the federal government is trying to curb the growth of Toronto and other major Canadian cities.

Answering a question during a visit to a high school Thursday night, he said he hopes Metropolitan Toronto's population will not rise to eight million from the present two million by 1980 as a federal study has indicated it might if growth is not contained.

He said his government spent hundreds of millions of dollars a year of "your hard-earned tax money in order to keep people out of Toronto."

The money is spent trying to improve Maritime towns and cities and to create jobs in poor parts of Canada so people won't have to come to Toronto.

"But if people want to go to Toronto, we just can't physically prevent them," he added.

QUEBEC — The internal crisis in the Quebec government has been postponed, not resolved.

The long knives are for the time sheathed.

Social Affairs Minister Claude Castonguay, after leaking on Wednesday his irreversible decision to resign that very night, called a press conference late Thursday to announce that his conscience did not allow him to quit in the midst of the labor turmoil in the province.

Communications Minister Jean-Paul L'Allier, who also had made known his firm decision to resign, rushed off his statement of reconsideration at 3 a.m. Friday. He could not call a press conference then as almost all the parliamentary correspondents had gone to bed, so Mr. L'Allier confided his scruples to a wire service.

★ ★ ★

"It is essential that all who are conscious of the public interest and who wish to work to maintain the social equilibrium realize today the gravity of the stakes and shoulder their responsibilities," he said.

He is staying on, at least for the present.

In the National Assembly Friday all seemed back to normal as Mr. L'Allier repeated his statement of fidelity to duty.

Mr. Castonguay was back at his statement of fidelity to duty.

Mr. Castonguay was back at his seat that had been empty the day before. Premier Robert Bourassa occasionally smiled and waved at a colleague, the members rose on the usual points of privilege, sent the usual barbs against the opposition and thumped their desks over witty repartee.

But beneath the bland surface the fissures run deep. There is a reckoning ahead and a settling of scores that will affect the course of the party, the province and the country.

★ ★ ★

There is no return after the steps taken by Mr. Castonguay and Mr. L'Allier. Two of the most prestigious ministers in the government, they stuck with their resignations on Wednesday, the day the labor protest movement was swirling with premonitions of insurrection.

That day in Sept-Iles, an isolated town of 18,000 on the North Shore of the St. Lawrence River, workers protesting the jailing Tuesday of the province's three labor chieftains in effect occupied the town, cutting off road and rail communications, taking over the radio station and closing down just about all economic activity.

A man died and a dozen people were injured after a car charged the demonstrators. In the state of confussd communications no one knew how serious was the challenge to the government or what proportions it would assume in cities, town and work sites throughout the province.

★ ★ ★

It was then that the two dissident ministers decided that the federal budget, brought down Monday night, contained the last ignominy and the final evidence that nothing was to be gained by negotiating with the federal government.

By raising unilaterally old-age pensions, Ottawa flouted Quebec's long-standing claims that social security is primarily a provincial field of jurisdiction and that the provinces must be allowed to elaborate a coherent social policy with social priorities determined by the provincial government.

By coincidence or calculation, the two men decided to act just when the Quebec government was most vulnerable. Their resignations, coming amid a crisis of civil disobedience and defiance of the government by the labor movement, stabbed the premier of Quebec, not Prime Minister Trudeau, in the back.

Their resignations, carried out, would have fanned the challenge to authority and conceivably led to the resignation of Mr. Bourassa. Who could have replaced him in the midst of a double crisis is not clear.

★ ★ ★

The bargaining power of the dissident ministers is at its peak this week when the government must at any cost remain united.

It seems clear that Mr. Bourassa got the two men to reconsider leaving the cabinet only after making commitments that he would take a firmer line with Ottawa.

Mobile Gunman Scores

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI) — Separate shooting incidents in Belfast late Friday and today killed one man and wounded six others.

None involved British troops.

The army at first said it was responsible for gunfire that killed a Roman Catholic vigilante and wounded four others in the Andersonstown area just before midnight but then said the shots came from a passing car.

A gunman in a passing car was also blamed by the army for the later wounding of an 18-year-old youth in the left arm as he left a taxi in Andersonstown. In North Belfast, a man was shot in the right ankle following a clash between rival crowds of Roman Catholics and Protestants, an army spokesman said.

In Londonderry, the Rosemount joint police-army post on the fringe of the Roman Catholic Creggan Estate was the target for two intensive attacks by snipers overnight. Troops said they believed they hit three gunmen.

The first battle lasted 40 minutes and an estimated 300 shots were exchanged with up to eight gunmen, the army said. The second came several hours later, lasted 75 minutes, and involved about 250 shots. Both attacks came from neighboring schools.

End Strikes, CLC Appeals To Quebecers

Times News Services

The executive of the nation-wide Canadian Labor Congress today appealed to striking Quebec workers to return to their jobs and restore calm to the troubled province.

The country's labor leaders also asked the Quebec government to do its share in releasing imprisoned union men and granting an amnesty to all those who have taken part in almost five days of walkouts following the jailing of the province's three top labor leaders.

In Montreal today, garbage is starting to pile up on city streets and litter accumulate in parks with the strike of 8,000 civic outside workers.

Police in Canada's largest city are harried with demonstrations, firebombings and the threat of bombings.

TROUBLE EASES

A school was firebombed Friday evening and threats of similar action made in other areas.

Since it is the weekend, there has been little trouble at industrial locations at such places as St. Jerome, St. Therese and Sept-Iles today. Friday, however, all industry and essential services in those communities was at a standstill.

Quebec premier Robert Bourassa Friday night shuffled his cabinet, putting Labor Minister Jean Cournoyer in the flashpoint civil service portfolio — taking it from Jean-Paul L'Allier who quit his cabinet earlier this week and then returned.

L'Allier was little respected by unionists who considered him a hard-liner — they feel

Soviet Ships Keep Going

Times News Services

Eight Soviet merchant ships are steaming toward the North Vietnamese port of Haiphong, mined last week by U.S. planes, Moscow radio reported today in a broadcast monitored in Britain.

The heavy tonnage vessels are loaded with fertilizer, agricultural machinery, food and clothing, according to the radio report. It did not say when they are due to arrive off North Vietnam.

Two Soviet warships are also moving toward the North Vietnamese coast, according to the Japanese defence agency.

TOWNS RECAPTURED

In Vietnam, South Vietnamese marines opened a counter-offensive in Quang Tri province today and recaptured three towns in their first major counter-attack against the North Vietnamese offensive.

Helicopters put a force of abut 1,700 government trooops on the northern side of the My Chanh River, and in the first hours of fighting the forces seized the towns of Hai Lang, Thon Hoi Yen and Thon Van Tri about five miles north of the river and six miles south of the provincial captial of Quang Tri.

In the southern region, heavy fighting raged for the third straight day at An Loc, the long-besieged provincial capital 60 miles north of Saigon. North Vietnamese troops made repeated bloody attacks on the city, which President Nguyen Van Thieu has ordered held at all costs.

In another development, military sources said today a U.S. warplane used a single electronically guided bomb Friday to knock out the Paul Doumer Bridge over the Red Biver in downtown Hanoi. The bridge was the only rail link between the North Vietnamese capital northeast and northwest to the Chinese border and to the port of Haiphong.

RALLIES SLATED

Meanwhile, the United States, protesters against the mining of North Vietnamese harbors planned a fifth day of demonstrations, with rallies scheduled in 20 cities.

Scattered displays of popular support for President Nixon's new war policy also appeared.

Community Planning Lack 'Snow Job'—Campbell

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

POWELL RIVER — Municipal and regional politicians were told here Friday night that they are handing the public "a snow job" by failing to develop proper community plans for their areas.

They were also warned that if they fail to take the initiative in this respect, provincial legislation may be introduced compelling them to prepare such plans.

The statements came from Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell when he addressed 75 delegates attending the 23rd annual conference of the Association of Vancouver Island Municipalities.

Campbell said only three out of more than 150 municipalities and five out of 28 regional districts in B.C. have so far adopted community plans, but every community in the province should have one.

"That is the real device that protects peoples' property because everyone knows what the objectives are in terms of density and so on.

"If municipalities have not looked at this in the next year, I would have to say in the legislature that community plans for municipalities will have to become somewhat more compulsory than they are now."

The minister's comments were in response to a question from Oak Bay Mayor Frances Elford, who asked his reaction to a resolution which the municipality had placed on the order paper for today's session of the conference.

The resolution urges Campbell to change recent amendments to the Municipal Act requiring only a simple majority for passage of zoning bylaws, instead of the former requirement of a two-thirds majority.

Campbell told Mrs. Elford that if a community plan existed no reasonable council should require a four-out-of-five vote to determine "the mechanics" because the mechanics were not as important as the plan itself.

But Saanich Mayor Hugh Curtis protested that the minister was using his community plan argument as a "distraction." No municipality had ever asked for the two-thirds majority to be changed, he said, and this action amounted to ratepayers' safeguards being eroded.

Similar comments came from other delegates.

Campbell retorted: "The community that has not got a community plan is giving the public a snow job, because spot zoning and the question of protection of property by zoning or subdivision regulations is as wishy-washy as any council wishes it to be."

He complained that municipal leaders were inconsistent by seeking a two-thirds majority in this instance yet demanding a straight majority in other voting issues, for instance with regard to referendums.

But Mrs. Elford remained unconvinced. She rebuked the minister for "comparing apples and oranges" because he likened voting on land use with voting on whether municipal dollars should be spent for a certain purpose.

Bus-Truck Collision Kills 14

BEAN STATION, Tenn. (UPI) — A double-deck Greyhound bus, behind schedule and barreling along an East Tennessee mountain highway in the gloom of a wet dawn, slammed into a tractor trailer today, killing 14 persons and reducing the two vehicles to wads of twisted junk.

"It was a nightmare," said one of the 15 survivors of the accident, which happened at 5:45 a.m. about 40 miles northeast of Knoxville on twisting, two-lane U.S. 11W.

The bus was split in two by the impact and the tractor-trailer, loaded with tar paper and paint, exploded in an inferno that melted much of the vehicle.

Flood Danger

OTTAWA — A "very serious" flood threat exists in the Fraser and Thompson river valleys the Commons was told Friday. Len Marchand (Liberal—Kamloops-Cariboo) said snowpack run-offs indicated these areas might face potentially worse floods than had occurred at any time since records had been kept.

TISDALLE OUT, ISHERWOOD IN

Veteral Social Credit MLA John Tisdalle, who has held Saanich and the Islands through six consecutive elections in 19 years, was rejected by his own party riding association Friday night, losing his bid for the provincial nomination to city lawyer Foster Isherwood.

Tisdalle, 53, was first elected to the legislature in the Bennett sweep of 1953. He said he had lost the nomination Friday by just one ballot.

Tisdalle said he has no immediate plans but he ruled out the possibility of seeking nomination in another riding.

STARTED AS GRIT

"We still don't know what's going to happen," he said. "We may not have an election for another year."

Isherwood, 49, and a politician campaigner since 1951, has been an unsuccessful federal election candidate for both the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberals, was twice elected an alderman in Saanich and was defeated in a bid for the Victoria mayoralty in 1971.

He began as a Liberal, switching to the Progressive Conservative party in 1964 because of what he called the "shameful mishandling" of the flag issue by the Liberals.

Tisdalle today repeated he has no immediate plans but said "I'm open for options. I'm always open for options. I just hope we (the Socreds) don't lose the riding, that's all."

He also pointed out again that "if the premier goes for another year, then our nomination will have to be reaffirmed."

Isherwood won the nomination on the second ballot. A third candidate, Carl Bitterman, was eliminated in the first vote.

Tisdalle, addressing the 98 voting Socreds and 50 visitors before the voting began, said "Social Credit is not on trial here. Neither is the member . . ."

"Nothing breeds success like success," Tisdalle said, citing the record of the party and of himself in the past 19 years. He referred to a suggestion made more than once during the meeting that it was time for a change.

UNFAITHFUL

"If you're of that opinion," Tisdalle warned, "you're no longer faithful to your government.

"You don't throw away a tried recipe for one that has not been tried," he said.

Isherwood in his pre-nomination speech told the meeting he was seeking the nomination "because I feel there is a job of work to be done for Saanich and the Islands. It's time for a new look . . ."

Isherwood told the meeting he had been a Social Crediter for four years and pledged to stand behind the party.

Isherwood, of 3615 Cadboro Bay Road, first ran for political office in the general election of 1951, as a Liberal. He lost to former Tory external affairs minister Howard Green in Vancouver Quadra.

He was defeated again in 1958 in Fraser Valley by the Tories.

In 1962 he ran, still as a Liberal, in Victoria, losing to the Conservatives.

In 1963 he sought the Liberal nomination again, losing to present Victoria Member of Parliament David Groos.

He ran as an independent Liberal in that year, losing the election to Groos.

In 1964 he announced his switch to the Tory ranks, ran as a Progressive Conservative in 1965, losing to the Liberals once more.

His second party change, to the Socreds, came in about 1968.

UVic Responds To Growing Interest In Canadian Studies

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

Yes, Virginia, there is another Canadian author besides Stephen Leacock.

And University of Victoria students are among the ever-increasing number of young Canadians who are finding that out for themselves.

UVic is becoming involved in a distinct trend sweeping the country which has seen a visible upsurge of interest in Canadian literature.

In September, the university's English department will offer two separate courses in Canadian literature — one to be divided into two sections — for students interested in the area.

And the department has hired two new professors, both specialists in Canadian literature, to join the teaching staff. The appointments are expected to be ratified by the board of governors Monday.

UVic's Canadian literature offerings can actually be considered an expansion, says Colin Partridge, an associate professor in the English department and director of American and Commonwealth Literature.

STUDENT DEMAND

Last year, his division had planned for only one section is each of the two courses offered and found that there were more students enrolled than could be handled.

So a second section was set up for the first of the two courses — a survey of Canadian literature — and the second section will stay this year.

If enrolment this year shows that two sections are not enough, a third will be added, Partridge said.

The expansion of Canadian literature studies has been accompanied by a corresponding drop in student interest in American literature.

The department has cut from two to one the number of sections in three separate courses in American literature, primarily because there weren't the numbers of student enrolment to support them.

But despite the cutbacks in the American offerings, Canadian literature is still not treated on an equal basis.

As it stands now, there are the two Canadian literature courses along with six American literature courses, 22 British-oriented courses, one commonwealth course covering American and British and 17 others which do not fit into any of these categories.

However, English department head Roy Leslie is not overly worried that Canadian literature is being neglected at UVic.

TALL ORDER

Asked if the two courses are enough to cover the entire spectrum of Canadian literature, Leslie said, "That is always a tall order, but for the number of people who are likely to be taking it, yes, it should."

Leslie said the second of the two courses is more specialized and allows for students to study the subject in greater detail than the survey course.

One of the men teaching Canadian literature at UVic this past year was Robert McDougall, a visiting professor from Carleton University. When McDougall returns to Carleton this summer, he will be engaged in an effort to develop the Canadian studies program there, which embraces other disciplines besides literature, into a more extensive training ground for university professors interested in Canada.

McDougall said there is no Canadian institution which concentrates on producing scholars in Canadian studies or literature.

As a result, with the increased demand by Canadian universities for specialists in Canadian studies, there is an insufficient supply.

He said that besides UVic, Simon Fraser University and the University of B.C. were also looking this year for professors to teach courses in Canadian studies, specifically Canadian literature.

McDougall said there has been a real crusade waged over the past decade or so to get Canadian literature accepted in the universities. He said the opposing argument has been that there is only one literature and that is English literature.

"But that argument just doesn't stand up anymore," he said, "and most of the pressure for new courses has been coming from students."

PAPERBACKS HELP

Partridge, Leslie and McDougall agree that one of the most important factors which has led to the acceptance and popularity of Canadian literature is the availability of paperback editions of novels, poems and plays by Canadian authors.

Several Canadian publishing firms have established extensive interests in supplying universities with paperback editions, which makes it much easier for the university professor and his class to obtain the needed books.

As for the reasons why Canadian literature has become popular lately, Robert Lawrence, another English professor at UVic, has some theories of his own.

Lawrence has been teaching Canadian literature at UVic since the university began offering it about eight years ago.

He feels more students are now interested in Canadian literature because they are becoming more aware of it at an earlier age. Canadian literature is taught much more in public high school now than ever before and students are becoming familiar with the names of authors and Canadian literature themes.

For another thing, Lawrence says, Canadians are becoming more aware of their Canadian identity, through what they read, hear watch and talk about.

For another, they want to "relieve their ignorance" about Canadian literature, since so many of us know so little about the novelists, poets and playwrights of our own country.

CANADIAN IDENTITY

Also with Canadian youth so much more on the move these days, hitch-hiking across the country and getting the feel of the land, they are able to identify with the Canadianism contained in the literature of our own authors.

If interest is sustained over the next few years, Canadian studies will likely offer even more specialized courses, perhaps including separate courses on Canadian fiction and Canadian poetry.

Partridge's vision is of course, a set of courses, which would lump Canadian literature in with literature of other new and developing countries.

"Canadians, as members of a new country, could learn a great deal from other new countries," Partridge said. "And this area of studies is something that has just not been done."

He suggested that Canadians could learn a lot from looking at the development of Australia and New Zealand and some of the Latin American countries.

Stephen Leacock, may he rest in peace, would be pleased at the implications.

TRUCKER CRUSHED TO DEATH

A 25-year-old Victoria trucker died instantly about 10 p.m. Friday when a truck-trailer unit backed over him on the Canadian Pacific truck lot at Swartz Bay.

The dead man, Paul M. Berard of Apt. 501, 707 Esquimalt Road, had been an employee of Capital Freightways for six years.

A coroner's inquest has been ordered.

Sidney RCMP said the driver of the truck was Ronald Vanzetta, 7129 East Saanich Road, Saanichton, an employee of McIlwaine Van and Storage.

Capital Freightways manager Tom Der said today there were no witnesses to the accident because it happened in a poorly-lighted area of the yard.

Youngster Dies In House Blaze

A four-year-old Saanich girl died early today, trapped in a rear bedroom as fire ravaged her Stevens Road home.

The victim, Christine Anne Westdorp, died after her mother, Mrs. Arthur Westdorp, carried her six-year-old sister Heidi to safety and attempted to return through the flames to save Christine.

The fire of unknown origin broke out in the home at 303 Stevens Road about 1:30 a.m. Mrs. Westdorp and the two children were alone in the house at the time.

DRIVEN BACK

The father, a desk editor at the Daily Colonist, was at work when the blaze occurred.

Mrs. Westdorp apparently after carrying six-year-old Heidi to safety tried to return through the flames to get Christine, was driven back and then attempted to rescue the child by putting a ladder from outside the house to the window of the bedroom.

Saanich Fire Department, which received the call at 1:34 a.m., attended with several units, but much of the house was destroyed.

Inspector Harry Adams of Saanich Police said today the three-bedroom home was badly damaged, with what escaped the fire itself suffering extreme smoke and water damage.

He said Saanich police responded to the call with seven officers but neither police nor firemen were able to rescue the girl. The exact cause of death is not yet known, he said.

Cornoner Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre was advised of the death today, but no decision on an inquest had been announced by early afternoon.

Police and fire department officials were still on the scene today, and investigation into the cause of the blaze still in progress.

Sands Mortuary is in charge of funeral arrangements, but no details have been announced.

The Westdorp family only recently moved here from the Prairies.

Canada Discovered by Radio

By BRYON McGILL
Times Staff

He's taken on and left more jobs across the country than any dozen people would in their lifetime, and he's talked to all the Important People of Canada on all the Important Things.

But Peter Gzowski only began to discover what Canada is about last October.

His awakening has come through "the most exciting medumi in Canada" — radio, expressly CBC radio, Gzowski explained in talking about his highly successful program This Country in the Morning.

"I have never learned as much about this country. There's incredible people all over the place," he said in an interview Friday at the Empress.

Gzowski, 37, has a career that has spanned nearly 20 years, which includes operating a bulldozer, working for a host of small and large newspapers, being a host on a television talk show, being a controversial editor of Maclean's magazine, and free-lancing in between.

"I have alway done what I wanted to do . . . but I'm happier with radio as a medium."

SMART PEOPLE

He said he always knew "people are so smart," and this has been dramatically borne out when 150,000 of them tune into his program three hours a day, five days a week.

"I sort of rap with them, and I experience a great sense of community. I feel I know all these people."

As an example of how radio can involve people, Gzowski wrote the first line of a lyric, and invited listeners to take it up from there.

"Guess how many people sat down and wrote lyrics? Some 1,500!"

And when asking earlier this year whether anybody could see a sign of spring, he got responses from across the country like "it's spring because today I took off my long underwear" or "although it's 40below this morning, for the first time the sun has landed on the kitchen table."

GZOWSKI
. . . incredible people all over the place

"This is folk poetry," Gzowski said. "It's much more important than politics."

CBC UNIQUE

He said CBC is uniquely Canadian.

"What do you measure CBC against? There's nothing like it in the world."

He said that although Canadian newspapers are generally better and more responsible than American ones, they still look the same and do the same things.

Canadian television models itself on American, and Canadian musicians, as good as they are, are still measured against standards south of the border.

He said newspapers are operating 10 years in the past, because they still cover speeches and get their news from automatic places like police and fire stations.

"Nothing is happening in newspapers. It's a medium that doesn't affect or involve anybody. People desperately need a voice and I don't think they can be heard in newspapers."

Gzowski was somewhat reluctant in talking about Canada's politics, but he noted that Quebec students and workers are getting together, the first time this has happened in Canada, and the ingredients of what elsewhere has always been an effective radical left.

"I don't pretend to understand Quebec. I don't understand Ontario."

Gzowski expressed admiration for Liberal maverick, David Anderson, member of parliament for Victoria.

He said Anderson's real strength isn't that he's fighting against oil tankers coming through B.C. waters but that "he stands up for the rights of B.C. against the establishment in the East."

With all of Canada's divisions and frictions, Gzowski said there is no other place in the world he'd rather be.

"There's hope here that we can solve the problems that are crushing and have crushed other nations."

'Desperate Need' at EMI

Child psychiatrist Phillip Ney said Friday there is a "desperate need" for the long-delayed children's unit at the Eric Martin Institute.

He blamed the provincial government for lack of progress in getting the 10-bed unit operational since he was named its clinical director almost four months ago.

"The only thing I can do now when there's a desperate situation is to admit the kids and put them on the adult floors," said Ney.

"It's a very unsatisfactory arrangement but I have to do it and at this point it's all because the B.C. Hospital Insurance Service will not approve the (operating) budget and let me get on with the job."

IMPAIRED TREATMENT

Ney said mixing adult and child patients in the psychiatric hospital raises real problems and impairs treatment of the children.

A proposed operating budget for the children's unit was forwarded by Royal Jubilee Hospital to BCHIS, the provincial agency which administers hospitals in B.C., several months ago.

A spokesman for BCHIS said today the unit's operating budget would be considered by the service's rates board Monday and the hospital would get the board's view shortly after.

The children's unit at EMI will be the second in B.C., the other being at Vancouver General Hospital. It has been planned for the institute since it opened almost 2½ years ago and the sixth floor where it will be located has been vacant since the opening.

EXPANSION PLANNED

The long-range plan is to ultimately expand the unit from 10 to 20 beds. Any development was delayed until early this year in a dispute between Health Minister Ralph Loffmark and the hospital and doctors over staffing.

The former wanted a clinical director to design and oversee the treatment program. Loffmark argued the unit could have a clinical director or doctors treating patients on a fee-for-service basis but not both.

In a compromise settlement announced in January, doctors will be allowed to treat their own patients in the unit. Ney's job as clinical director is expected to take about half his time.

Boy's Deed Gives Wonderful Feeling

A 12-year-old boy has given "a wonderful feeling" — $1,157's worth — to a local businessman.

The boy is Robert Godfrey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Godfrey, 1750 Haultain.

The Man is Les Pelvey, owner of Oak Bay Marine Sales and Service.

A week ago Friday, Robert was on his way to a baseball practice in Allenby Park. He saw an unlocked bank bag at the side of the road.

Turned in at the Saanich police station, the bag was found to hold a deposit slip and $1,175 in cash.

Pelvey says he was "very, very surprised" to have the money returned to him the next day.

"In these days it gives you a wonderful feeling when something like this happens," he said.

In turn for the "wonderful feeling", Pelvey said he intends to send Robert written thanks and something a little more tangible.

Family Service Loses Community Chest Support

The Community Chest of Greater Victoria has decided to withdraw its $82,000 annual contribution to Family and Children's Service.

Notification of the decision by the Chest's board of directors was sent to FCS president Walter Cowsden in a letter Thursday.

The decision means that after this year's commitment, the Community Chest will no longer contribute to FCS's financing.

Chest president W. H. Armstrong said this will enable the Chest to better meet the needs of other agencies participating in the Chest or even those who are not members of the United Appeal.

Cowsden said the decision to drop FCS support will weaken the Chest's appeal to the public.

Cowsden also said he realizes that the Chest has run into a number of problems because of the failure of recent years' drives to reach their goals, but said dropping FCS will remove one of the areas where it has been easy for people to relate to, children and families in distress, "a real plus for the Chest in obtaining contributions."

Although the $82,000 is only a small part of the Chest's $2.35 million budget, Cowsden said, it is still a substantial amount and may lead to cutbacks in service by FCS.

He said he would not like to see support for the agency come exclusively from the provincial government and said the agency's board may have to consider some kind of independent appeal.

Reasons cited by Armstrong for discontinuing the grant included the Chest's belief that financing for FCS was provided for by stature, and that it is no longer appropriate to use voluntary funds for the purpose.

The number of agencies to share the United Appeal's proceeds this year is now 22. This year's target amount will be set after budgets from the different agencies are considered in June.

Ask the Times

Q. In 1906 the Boston Globe had an article regarding the largest sailing vessels in the world, one being the six-masted schooner, Thomas W Lawson. What was the type and rig of the other? R.L.

A. The Thomas W. Lawson was not a six-masted schooner, she was the only seven-masted schooner ever to be built. She was not the largest sailing vessel, either, but the largest schooner. Built in 1902, she was 385 feet long. The largest ship up to that time was the German-built Preussen, the only full-rigged five-masted ship to be built. She was 407.5 feet in length. The largest sailing vessel in history was the steel-hulled, five-masted barque France II, built in Bordeaux in 1911. She was 418.8 feet in length.

The France II, however, also had auxiliary power, being fitted with two steam engines.

Although she was smaller, the Thomas W. Lawson had a huge loading capacity because of her beam, having a loading capacity of 8,100 tons, compared to the Preussen's 8,000 tons.

Q. What is the quickest and most efficient method of hulling large quantities of sunflower seeds?

A. Apparently, there is no really quick method — other than a special machine which is unrealistically expensive for most people. The operator of a local health food store said there's no other way than doing it laboriously by hand.

Too Many Cooks in Learning's Kitchen

IT INTERESTS ME TO note that after months of playing boule-roulant with one of education's most durable chestnuts, a citizen's committee has reported itself of divided mind about corporal punishment in the schools.

This inability to agree is not surprising. It's the result that a school board can expect when it turns a bunch of amateur cooks loose in education's kitchen.

Also, one ingredient essential to an informed decision was missing.

Any group that undertakes to sort out the pros and cons of strapping needs something more tangible than a sampling of community opinion on which to base its judgment.

Before the committee began it's deliberations, each strapped.

It's probable that some of those members got the strap at least once in their student years. If they were real little hellers, they may have been requested to extend the hand palm-up any number of times.

Still, a refresher course would have been in order. I hope that when next a school board mounts a committee on corporal punishment, it will insist that those who serve on it back the theory with experience.

To be effective, the subject should have sampled various alternatives to a paw-tingling before he is strapped.

He should first be counselled, exiled from the classroom for brief periods, kept after school, and sent member should have been down the hall for a session with a principal who doesn't know what the hell to do about him either.

His murky little psyche should be probed, his eyesight, hearing and capacity for learning investigated.

If our committee member's parents are still topside, they should be consulted for clues that might explain his anti-social behavior pattern.

Lastly our subject should be dealt three stingers on each hand, preferably by a teacher who wishes to God that the board had chosen to turn a committee loose on a matter of genuine concern.

Like parental responsibility.

Or the California influence on British Columbia education.

Or how many students can be crammed into a classroom before education becomes a sorry farce.

With such thoughts in mind, even a teacher who employs the strap rarely if at all might be tempted to administer a couple of extra licks!

B.C. Tel, to who my compliments on its always effective and often superlative TV commercials, would have us subscribers say hello to an old friend. This is the upright telephone with cylindical shaft and pestle-shaped receiver.

Like others who toiled in the newsrooms of the past, I have sentimental recollections of the so-called candlestick phone. It lent a glamor that the squatty black instrument on my desk can't supply, and its receiver was more than merely a thing of beauty.

It was functional. Whether by accident or design, it fitted perfectly between ear and lean shoulder, thereby freeing the hands for other purposes.

We've even thought of having one of the new-old uprights installed at home, but the prospect of a $10 changeover fee and an additional $1.95 monthly rental exercises a cooling effect.

Sentiment's dandy, and there are days when even an optimist may be inclined to regard this discordant present as a wrong number. Even so, we'll stick with black-and-squatty, even though its receiver doesn't fit this plumper shoulder.
